111 file candidacies for 40 seats in Nov. election

12 beat filing deadline; 75 more certified by CEC

By MONETH G. DEPOSA
moneth_deposa@saipantribune.com
REPORTER

The Commonwealth Election Commission closed yesterday the filing of election candidacies, with a record 111 applicants vying for the 40 seats up for grabs in the general elections in November.

The agency did not receive a single legislative initiative when it closed the deadline yesterday at 4:30pm.

So far, only one popular initiative is now sure of being on the ballot in November: the proposed inclusion of the Legislature in the application of the Open Government Act.

On Nov. 7, CNMI voters will vote for a governor and lieutenant governor, six seats for the Senate, 18 in the House of Representatives, four mayors of populated islands, two Board of Education seats, and nine council members for all islands.

Records obtained by Saipan Tribune show that, of the 111 candidates, 50 are running for House seats in various precincts on three islands.

A total of 18 candidates will be jockeying for the six vacant Senate slots.

Although the three islands would only need nine municipal council members, the Election Commission recorded 19 applicants for the position.

The mayoralty positions for Saipan, Rota and Tinian have 15 candidates as of yesterday noon, while three are seeking for Board of Education slots.

The Election Commission certified 75 more candidates, in addition to the 24 it approved last week.

Of the newly certified candidates, 26 belong to the Republican Party; 17 from the Covenant Party; one Democratic Party member; 20 independent candidates; and 11 persons for nonpartisan positions.

The 19 newly certified candidates under the Covenant Party are House contenders: Vicente Cabrera, Benjamin Cepeda, Canice Taitano, Froilan Tenorio, Antonia Tudela, Raymond Palacios, Rafael Demapan, Henry Rabauliman, Jesus Elameto, Edmund Villagomez, David Maratita, Felicidad Ogumoro, Thomas Camacho, Sylvestre Iguel, Daniel Quitugua, Ramon Basa, and Edwin Aldan.

Under the GOP banner, Heinz Hofschneider and Arnold Palacios were certified as the party's gubernatorial bets, along with Ramon Dela Cruz and Donald Flores for mayoralty positions.

Four GOP Senate bets were also certified: Jude Hofschneider, Pete Reyes, Ralph Torres, and Diego Benavente.

A total of 19 individuals were approved to run under the GOP banner in November.

The 17 independent candidates who were certified are all running for House seats in various precincts.

'Sablan, 11 others beat filing deadline'

Incumbent Rep. Tina Sablan was among the 12 individuals who filed their candidacies at the last minute. Sablan is seeking higher office: a Senate seat for Saipan.

Another candidate surprised the public when he filed his intention to run for mayor of Saipan: Angelo Villagomez. Independent bets Candido Taman and Juan Demapan also filed their candidacies for the same position.

Former NMC Alumni Association president Jesse Torres joined the last day of filing as a House of Representative candidate.

Others who filed yesterday included Stanley Torres, Willie Brundidge Jr., and Raymond Palacios—all for House seats.

James Mendiola, Lucia Blanco-Maratita, and Norbert Mendiola filed for Board of Education seats.

Eric Diaz also submitted a petition to run as municipal council member for Saipan.

Ombudsman's Office staff sues Baka, Grey over denial of his wife's entry

By FERDIE DE LA TORRE
ferdie_delatorre@saipantribune.com
REPORTER

A staff at the Federal Ombudsman's Office is suing acting Attorney General Gregory Baka and Immigration director Melvin Grey for allegedly refusing to issue a waiver that would allow his Bangladeshi wife to come to the CNMI.

Mohammad Feroj Ahmed, through counsel Mark B. Hanson, sued Baka and Grey for retaliation and deprivation of his constitutional rights.

Ahmed asked the U.S. District Court for the NMI to order the defendants to pay him damages, attorney's fees, and court costs.

Ahmed, a Bangladeshi, arrived in the CNMI in 1996 as a contract worker. Starting in 1998, he was actively involved in various workers rights movements in the Commonwealth.

As a founding member and officer of the United Workers Alliance, an alien workers rights group formed in 1998, Ahmed was outspoken on issues of labor abuses and human rights violations in the CNMI.

Through Ahmed's work with the United Workers Alliance, he met with various U.S. congressional delegations that visited the CNMI and discussed with congressmen and their staffers the concerns of alien workers and the CNMI government's failure to protect contract workers' rights.

In 1999, Ahmed was interviewed by a New York Times reporter where he talked about rampant illegal recruitment of foreign labor and egregious labor abuses in the CNMI. That interview appeared in the New York Times Magazine later that year.

In 2000, Ahmed accepted a position with the then newly created Federal Ombudsman's Office as a caseworker and translator, assisting alien workers with labor and employment related grievances against employers.

In March 2004, the Office of the Attorney General created Section 804 to give the Attorney General discretion to deny the issuance of entry permits to certain foreign nationals, citizens and residents from various countries and providing for waivers and exceptions from blanket country exclusions.

Since its adoption in 2004,

Hanson said, Bangladesh has been on the excluded countries list.

On Aug. 5, 2008, Ahmed married Azmery Sultana in Bangladesh. Four months later, Ahmed applied for an exemption for his new wife to enter the CNMI from Bangladesh.

After waiting for almost two months for a response, Baka notified Ahmed on Feb. 3, 2009, that his wife would not be granted a discretionary waiver.

Hanson said the reason stated in Baka's letter to Ahmed was that "it was not in the best interest of the Commonwealth that the exclusion be waived."

Hanson said Baka also referred to the passage of Public Law 110-229 (federal takeover legislation) on May 8, 2008, as arising from the Commonwealth's inability to manage its own immigration.

Hanson said Baka "somewhat insultingly and wholly irrelevantly" suggested that Ahmed and his wife apply to the U.S. Department of State for a visa—a visa that would presumably allow Sultana to travel to the U.S., but not necessarily to the Commonwealth.

Hanson said Grey's comments to Ahmed soon after the waiver denial clarified Baka's odd comments on the federal takeover of Commonwealth immigration in his denial letter, "shedding light on the actual basis of the denial of waiver for Sultana."

The lawyer said Grey's comments to Ahmed included: "The whole Federal Ombudsman's Office worked for the federalization and now the federal government cannot address your problem? You are a part of that office, they worked for federal takeover and that happened, so the federal government should take care of your problem."

Ahmed appealed to Baka, providing support letters from the U.S. Attorney's Office, a Federal Bureau of Investigation agent, a U.S. Labor investigator and others.

To date, Hanson said, Baka has failed to respond to the appeal.

"Because of defendants' retaliation against Mr. Ahmed, he has been denied of opportunity to be united with his new wife and he has suffered immeasurable emotional distress as a result," Hanson added.

Tourism Tuesday

A weekly update from the Marianas Visitors Authority
Tourism is everybody's business.

Who's traveling our Northern Mariana Islands? Let's find out more about the visitors from our major markets.

Russia

Russia, along with China, is a secondary tourism market for the Northern Marianas. Last fiscal year, visitors from Russia comprised 2% of all visitors (6,178 out of 396,497 total arrivals). However, the market is significant; as the average Russian visitor spends over $3,700 on-island during their visit, one Russian visitor equals the economic benefit of 3.7 packaged tourists. So far this fiscal year, Russians make up 2% of all visitors arrivals (5,479 of 276,680 arrivals through June 2009), and Russian arrivals are up 24% overall this year.

Who is our average Russian visitor? In July 2009, 58 percent of them were females and 42 percent were males. The largest age group was under age 13 (29 percent). Almost two-thirds of them (60 percent) were on their first visit to the CNMI, while 30 percent had visited the CNMI before (10 percent did not respond).

Who do our Russian visitors travel with, and how do they make their travel arrangements? 57 percent of Russians traveling to the Northern Marianas last month were traveling with children, and 31 percent were traveling with spouses. Ninety-eight percent were traveling for pleasure; the overwhelming travel plan during their stay was golf (53 percent), followed by diving, getting married (both 25 percent) and others.

What influences our average Russian visitor to choose the Northern Marianas over other destinations? The most popular factors were travel agents (53 percent), followed by climate, friends and family, and others.

So the next time you see a visitor you think might be from Russia, smile and give them a warm "hafa adai" welcome!

Tina Sablan faces off with 7 others for Saipan Senate seat

By HAIDEE V. EUGENIO
haidee_eugenio@saipantribune.com
REPORTER

Rep. Tina Sablan (I-Saipan) is facing off with seven other candidates seeking a Senate seat on Saipan. She filed her candidacy on the last day of filing yesterday.

Sablan told Saipan Tribune that she is looking forward to debates with the seven other candidates.

The eight candidates are vying for two Saipan Senate seats.

She said she would continue to advocate for greater transparency in the Senate as she has done these past 18 months in the House.

Besides Sablan, the other independent candidates are Paul Camacho and Taotao Tano president Greg Cruz.

Under the Republican Party is Senate President Pete P. Reyes seeking re-election, and Rep. Ralph Torres.

The Covenant Party contenders are Deputy Labor Secretary Cinta Kaipat and former Rep. Ana Teregeyo.

In a statement yesterday, Sablan said as a senator she would be in an excellent position to help improve the process by which confirmation of appointments to critical government boards and commissions are made.

She said advice and consent for board and commission appointments are functions unique to the Senate for the most part, and, "unfortunately these functions have not been carried out as diligently as they should have been in prior years, with often negative consequences."

"As senator, I would be committed to carefully scrutinizing the backgrounds and qualifications of all gubernatorial nominations, and exploring ways to improve the confirmation process formally through legislation," said Sablan, currently the youngest member of the House.

Since being elected two years ago in the House, Sablan said she has strived to consistently act according to her conscience; to push for greater transparency in government, and especially in the Legislature; to be prudent and frugal in expenditures of public funds; and to speak honestly and openly about the many serious and complex issues facing the CNMI.

The CNMI, she said, needs new, honest and visionary leaders who would bring fresh perspectives to the table of government, and who would act responsibly and conscientiously on behalf of their constituents, with the long-term interests of the CNMI in mind.

"This year, I have been encouraged by the number of individuals fresh to politics who have announced their candidacies in the House. Fresh perspectives are needed in the Senate as well, and I believe that I can contribute considerably in that regard," she added.

Flurry of federal officials visiting after Rahall's delegation

By HAIDEE V. EUGENIO
haidee_eugenio@saipantribune.com
REPORTER

The CNMI should expect a flurry of key federal officials and staffers this month following the visit of U.S. House Natural Resources Committee chair Rep. Nick Rahall II (D-WV) and five other House members on a fact-finding mission on federalization.

U.S. Senate Committee on

Energy and Natural Resources staffers Allen Stayman and Isaac Edwards will also be here toward the end of the month to further discuss federalization issues with local officials.

Senate President Pete P. Reyes (R-Saipan) said Stayman and Edwards, along with Delegate Gregorio Kilili C. Sablan, will have a courtesy visit with local lawmakers on Aug. 27.

Both the U.S. House Natural Resources Committee chaired by Rahall and the U.S. Senate on Energy and Natural Resources chaired by Sen. Jeff Bingaman have jurisdictions over U.S. insular areas.

On Aug. 18, the CNMI House and Senate will have a joint meeting with Rear Admiral Douglas Todd Biesel, commander of the U.S. Naval Force-es Marianas, at 10am.

Tony Babauta, who is President Obama's nominee as assistant secretary for insular areas with the U.S. Department of the Interior, will be having a meeting with CNMI lawmakers on Aug. 24 at 10am., according to Reyes.

Ray Mabius, the secretary of the Navy, will also have a brief meeting with CNMI officials on Aug. 24 at 3pm.

which has jurisdiction over insular areas—will take its lead from the CNMI's first non-voting delegate, Rep. Gregorio Kilili Sablan, on federalization.

"It is our effort to strike a balance here and to do what is necessary to help fulfill our responsibility to the CNMI," he said.

In a news briefing yesterday at the Pacific Islands Club before the congressional delegation headed for Guam, Sablan said it is important to include China and Russia in the CNMI-Guam tourist visa waiver program.

Rep. Madeleine Bordallo (D-GU), chair of the Subcommittee on Insular Affairs, Fisheries, Oceans and Wildlife, said Guam supports the visa waiver program.

She said Rahall's visit speaks of the importance placed by the committee on issues affecting the insular areas.

With Congress having 441 members, Bordallo said it is a challenge to get everyone interested in small insular areas that, in many cases, are not treated the same way as states and other jurisdictions.

No to further delay

Sablan also reiterated his statement that he does not want any further delay in the Nov. 28 implementation of Public Law 110-229 or the federalization law.

A separate statement from Gov. Benigno R. Fitial, who met with the Rahall delegation yesterday morning, said he supports extending the implementation of federal immigration rules by one year since the U.S. Department of Homeland Security has yet to come up with draft regulations for investor and worker visas.

Fitial said this should allow for a federal visa waiver for the CNMI's China and Russia tourism markets.

But Sablan said yesterday that he met with Homeland Security Secretary Janet Napolitano last week, and was told that DHS will release the regulations concerning the implementation of federalization in two to three weeks.

He said there has been some "movements" within DHS as a result of pressure from Bordallo's subcommittee, the congressional delegation visit to Saipan in July, and others.

Fund, admin settlement negotiation yet to start

By MONETH G. DEPOSA
REPORTER

Two months after the Superior Court ruled that the CNMI government owes the NMI Retirement Fund $231 million in unpaid employer's contribution, nothing has been set up between the parties to begin settlement discussions.

Fund administrator Mark Aguon disclosed this to the Fund board of trustees during its regular meeting last week.

Saipan Tribune learned that a notice has been sent to the governor's office on the designation of a negotiating team representing the Fund but a response has yet to be received as of last week.

Aguon said only a letter from the presiding officers of the Legislature was transmitted to the Fund where a briefing is being scheduled.

Aguon emphasized that the schedule is only for a "briefing" and not the proper negotiation process.

"We haven't actually met with the negotiating team of the administration..." Aguon reported to the board, adding that a follow-up communication will be transmitted to the Executive Branch as soon as possible.

Former board chair Juan T. Guerrero, during last week's board meeting, expressed frustration over the "inaction" of the central government on the already-decided issue.

However he said, he's counting on the new Fund leadership to continue the direction set by both the board and the retirees.

Guerrero stepped down from his position as he is running for governor in November.

In a letter to Fitial, Guerrero said that, contrary to claims of some people, neither he nor the board ever expressed any interest in forcing a complete and immediate payment of the court judgment.

He urged the governor to push forward in negotiations with the Fund to ensure that the government pays the maximum amount it can afford without unnecessarily endangering the provision of critical services to the community.

MARSHALS

to a forfeiture case filed by the U.S. government.

The U.S. Marshal served the warrant for the boat on Villagomez. The boat is currently being held at the Smiling Cove Marina.

U.S. District Court for the NMI Chief Judge Alex R. Munson issued the warrant on Thursday, directing the U.S. Marshal's Office to seize the vessel.

Munson directed the U.S. Marshal's Office to use whatever means necessary to protect and maintain the boat in their custody until a further court order.

Munson issued the warrant after the U.S. government on Thursday filed a complaint for civil forfeiture against Dr. V.

The judge said he reviewed the U.S. government's complaint as well as its application for warrant of arrest, including an affidavit of a Federal Bureau of Investigation special agent.

Munson said a review of the documents shows probable cause to believe that the boat is subject to forfeiture, in accordance with the Supplemental Rules of Admiralty or Marine Claims and Asset Forfeiture Actions.

In his affidavit, FBI special agent Joseph Auther stated that during the trial of Villagomez and co-defendants James A. Santos and Joaquina Santos, it was established through testimony and documentary evidence that Villagomez bought Dr. V in 2006 for a price of between $45,000 and $60,000.

As declared by Villagomez, the money to buy the boat was received from James Santos and his wife, Joaquina Santos, Auther said.

He said James Santos signed a $50,000 check on Oct. 31, 2006, drawn against an account belonging to Islas Micronesia Sales, a company wholly-owned by James Santos, and made payable to Villagomez.

The agent said ISLAS was one of the companies through which the defendants perpetrated the scheme to defraud the Commonwealth Utilities Corp.

On Dec. 7, 2007, James Santos

signed a check drawn against on account owned by himself and Joaquina Santos and made payable Villagomez in the amount of $15,000, Auther said. The check had the note "drydock/repair/equipment," he added.

In addition to the evidence produced at trial, Auther said an FBI investigation revealed that Villagomez paid $45,000 in cash for Dr. V on Sept. 28, 2006. At the time of purchase, Auther said, the boat was in need of repairs estimated to be at least $15,000.

The agent said that since Villagomez purchased the boat but prior to Dec. 7, 2007, Villagomez paid for maintenance, repairs, and improvements to the vessel, the sum total of which was $15,000 to $20,000.

"The costs associated with the Dr. V included costs for drydocking, equipment, and repairs," he said.

"There is reasonable belief that Dr. V constitutes, or was derived from, proceeds from the crimes of wire fraud and fraud relating to the program receiving federal funds," Auther added.

Last week Munson sentenced Villagomez to seven years and three months in prison for his role in the Rydlyme corruption scandal.

Joaquina Santos and James A. Santos were sentenced to six years and six months in prison each for their involvement in the scheme to defraud CUC and the United States.

The defendants said they will appeal.

urday afternoon and left yesterday afternoon, included Sablan, Bordallo, U.S. Virgin Islands Rep. Donna Christensen, South Carolina Rep. Henry Brown, and American Samoa Rep. Eni Faleomavaega.

With the exemption of Faleomavaega, the members of the delegation held a news briefing yesterday, right after meeting with the Saipan Chamber of Commerce.

Brown, who visited Saipan for the first time, also spoke of the United States' commitment to the islands because of the men and women who lost their lives here during World War II.

Workers' plight

Rahall, who is also vice chair of the U.S. House Transportation and Infrastructure Committee, said documented foreign workers' request for improved immigration will be taken into consideration.

"I think certainly their feelings and their comments and suggestions will be taken into consideration, yes," he said.

Rahall, Christensen and Sablan attended Sunday's peaceful assembly of at least a thousand community members, mostly foreign workers, to hear directly from them their concerns about federalization.

Christensen was here two years ago when her then subcommittee held a field hearing on the original bill that became the basis for the CNMI federalization section of P.L. 11-229. She said they are still committed to supporting the economy of the CNMI.

Hospitality

Sablan invited Rahall and the rest of the delegation to come to the CNMI to hear firsthand from many individuals the impact of policies from Washington, D.C., including federalization.

The delegation recognized House Speaker Nancy Pelosi's approval of their fact-finding mission to the CNMI, as well as to American Samoa, Palau and Guam.

Rahall, Christensen, Bordallo and Brown said they're grateful for the hospitality shown by the CNMI during their brief stay on Saipan.

Rahall and Christensen repeatedly said that Sablan "has done a tremendous job in his first year as the delegate from the CNMI."

Fitial thanked Rahall and the delegation for visiting and listening to CNMI concerns.

"I am very pleased to learn of the increasing legislative support for the CNMI-Guam visa waiver issue, and I look forward to more positive communications with key federal policymakers and better relations with our federal government," he said.

Fitial hosted a dinner for the delegation on Sunday night. On Monday morning, they had breakfast with members of the CNMI Legislature.

That was followed by a courtesy call on the governor, and a meeting with mayors.

Fitial, in a statement, said he and his Cabinet members covered a variety of topics with the visiting delegation, including the vulnerability of the CNMI economy and its ability to sustain further federal wage hikes, the visa waiver issue, and DHS' readiness to fully implement U.S. immigration law in the Commonwealth.

At the meeting, Fitial sought the federal government's assistance for the CNMI's pressing health care needs, including the hiring of qualified doctors and medical professionals. Fitial also asked for federal funds for health care and for continued access to medical professionals under the new federal immigration rules.

Rahall said they also met with officials from DHS, the U.S. Attorney's Office, Social Security office, Department of the Interior, and the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

CORRECTIONS

with obstruction of justice.

Police served the arrest warrants on Seman yesterday and on Quitano on Friday.

A $5,000 cash bail was imposed on each defendant. The two were not taken to court because they immediately posted bail after their arrests.

The arrests stemmed from a White Collar Crimes/Public Corruption Task Force investigation that was based on a request by Corrections Capt. Georgia Cabrera.

According to the investigation conducted by Juan Santos of the Task Force, Seman and Quitano, both assigned to the Correction Emergency Response Team, had assaulted inmate Robert Jake Palacios on June 17, 2009. The attack allegedly happened inside the Isolation Unit.

Investigation showed that Palacios was assigned to a cell for violent offenders and offenders serving lengthy jail sentences. He had asked several times to be transferred to another cell to avoid problems with three violent offenders. His requests were denied.

On June 17 Palacios made an obscene gesture at Quitano. Seman and Quitano, along with two other Corrections officers, led Palacios to an open area within the prison and talked to him.

Palacios refused to go back to his cell, prompting Seman to cite him for disobeying an officer's order.

Palacios was then handcuffed and escorted to the Isolation Unit. While his hands were cuffed from behind, Seman and Palacios allegedly shouted at Palacios and slapped him many times in the face.

Another inmate and some CERT officers allegedly saw the defendants beating up Palacios, who was still in handcuffs.

Seman then asked for a restraining chair, where Palacios was made to sit. He was then locked inside the Isolation Unit, still on the restraining chair. After less than two hours, two other CERT officers came and removed the chair.

Palacios later complained to two other officers of pain in his ear. He asked to be taken to the hospital.

The following day, June 18, Quitano and another CERT officer escorted Palacios to the Commonwealth Health Center for medical attention.

At the hospital, Palacios signaled to one of his friends to call his mother, Jenny Palacios, who arrived and talked to him next to the emergency section where he told her about the beatings.

On June 26, Jenny Palacios wrote a letter to the editor about the beatings. The letter was published in local newspapers.

Then acting DOC Commissioner Dolores San Nicolas immediately talked to Palacios to confirm whether he was indeed assaulted. San Nicolas then instructed Capt. Cabrera to call the Office of the Attorney General.

The Task Force learned that another Corrections officer had tried to convince Palacios to drop his complaint against the CERT officers in exchange for letting him out on home furlough and eventual transfer to the cell for misdemeanor offenders.

Quitano also allegedly tried to hit the face of another inmate who saw the beatings. The officer told the inmate that he didn't see the beatings.

The Task Force learned that CERT officers did not submit any incident report or any notice to their superiors at DOC.

CERT officers, at the alleged direction of Seman and senior officers, failed to record the activities surrounding the assault and the restraining chair.

The Task Force said CERT officers, however, recanted their first statements and then confirmed that the slappings had occurred.

The Task Force also discovered that the surveillance camera recordings for June 17 to 23 were missing.

On Saturday, her body will be transferred from CHC to the Mount Carmel Cathedral at 7:30am for public viewing. A Mass and rosary are also slated that day.

After the Mass, her remains will be flown to Rota where a Mass and interment are slated on Aug. 18 at 1:30pm.

Inos is survived by husband Cristobal Songao Inos, children Denise Lorraine and Ana Blossom, and two siblings who are based in Hawaii. Hocog said the two siblings will arrive tomorrow night.

Hocog said his sister, though not bedridden, truly suffered from her illness. Inos had been flying off-island for medical treatment.

Mentor

Gov. Benigno R. Fitial, who issued a statement yesterday upon learning of Inos' death, said he considered her as one of his mentors.

"Dr. Rita Hocog Inos was my running mate when I first established the Covenant Party and ran for governor in 2001. Before she ran with me, she was the first female candidate for the office of Lt. Governor with the late Gov. Lorenzo I. Guerrero," Fitial said.

"I relied on her for advice on public policy issues concerning education. This is why I chose her to be my running mate in the 2001 CNMI general elections. Our plan was for me to focus on economic development, while she handled important education issues. This is also why I nominated her to the Northern Marianas College's Board of Regents, where she served until she passed away [yesterday]," he said, adding that Inos was committed to the cause of education in the Commonwealth and throughout the Pacific region.

Fitial described Inos as a dedicated public servant.

"I am thankful for Rita's friendship. She was a very compassionate woman who cared very deeply for our community. She will be remembered and missed. I extend my condolences to Rita's family. Rita was family to me," the governor added.

Wise judgment

Inos was appointed to the Northern Marianas College Board of Regents in February 2006 and served as its chairperson from June 2006 to July last year.

Her successor to the post, Charles V. Cepeda, yesterday expressed sadness over the passing of Inos.

"During the college's most difficult and challenging times, some of the members of the Board of Regents looked to Dr. Inos for her reassuring leadership and her wise judgment," said Cepeda, adding that Inos was a visionary who worked tirelessly to position the college for its unprecedented growth since her appointment to the board.

NMC President Dr. Carmen Fernandez described the late educator as a great mentor.

"Dr. Inos was a great boss, mentor, and friend. I love her and will miss her dearly," she told Saipan Tribune, adding that Inos dedicated her career to advancing educational opportunities for the people of the CNMI.

"Her passion for students was unparalleled. Her leadership roles at the college, at the Public School System, and in other organizations have created a legacy that will have a long-lasting impact on the educational landscape of the Northern Marianas," said Fernandez, adding that NMC owes many of its accomplishments to Inos' leadership and guidance.

Fernandez asked members of the NMC community yesterday to keep Inos in their thoughts and prayers. During a faculty assembly, she also asked faculty members for a moment of silence in honor of Inos.

Accomplishments

Inos was the PSS Commissioner from June 1998 to December 2005. She began her education career on the islands in 1972 as a bilingual teacher at Rota and Saipan schools.

Inos obtained her doctorate from the University of Southern California and her master's degree in school administration and supervision from the San Jose State University in California.

She obtained master's course work in educational anthropology from the California State University and a bachelor's degree in Liberal Arts from the University of Hawaii-Manoa.

She completed high school at the Arlington High School in Texas.

Tinian municipality cuts work hours by 8

By MONETH G. DEPOSA
moneth_deposa@saipantribune.com
REPORTER

The Tinian Municipality has cut the work schedule of its employees by eight hours from 80 to 72 biweekly.

According to executive officer Bill Cing, this was done so the Tinian Mayor's Office will be able to keep all its employees, at least until the end of the current fiscal year.

Cing said this was also a result of the 15 percent across-the-board cut in the budgets of government agencies.

Tinian Mayor Jose P. San Nicolas chose to reduce his employees' work hours—and their salaries—rather than lay off personnel, he said.

"Our mayor opted to cut their hours rather than lay off people because we believe that it's better to receive a little than none at all," he added.

Cing said the reduced hours will last until Sept. 30 and would likely continue in the next fiscal year if the economy does not improve.

Because of the lack of available businesses on island, the municipality has served as people's only source of employment for many years.

Cing described the available budget for the municipality as "just enough to sustain the municipality operation" until the end of fiscal year 2009.

He said Tinian generates only about $2.8 million in local revenue every year, which include the remittance of its sole business operator, Tinian Dynasty Hotel & Casino, to help pay for the municipal employees' wages.

Tinian's proposed appropriation for the next fiscal year is at $7.8 million.

Besides the reduced work hours of employees, Cing said Tinian also monitors its utility consumption, including the shutting down of street lamps and nonfunctional offices.

Cing said they are also mindful of the municipality's expenditures and have cut back on official travel, including that of the island's mayor.

San Nicolas, who has been criticized in the past for his frequent off-island trips, indicated in early interviews that majority of these travels are personal expenses, although these events aim to "make money" for Tinian.

Cing cited a number of the mayor's projects that are ongoing on Tinian: Abalone, road improvements, recreational projects, and educational programs.

'10 new practical nurses'

Emmanuel College recently conferred a plaque of appreciation to San Nicolas for supporting its 11-month nursing program on Saipan.

Saipan Tribune learned that of the 33 licensed practical nursing graduates of the college, 10 were assisted by the Tinian government through its scholarship program.

Cing, who received the recognition on the mayor's behalf, said all these licensed practical nurses will be assigned to the Tinian Health Center.

Drunk man allegedly points shotgun at teen in As Matuis

By FERDIE DE LA TORRE

REPORTER

A drunk man allegedly damaged property and pointed a shotgun at a teenager outside a house along Matansa Drive in As Matuis Saturday night.

Glen K. Kalen was arrested for illegal possession of a firearm, illegal possession of a loaded and unsecured firearm, disturbing the peace, and assault with a dangerous weapon.

Kalen, 19, was taken to the Superior Court yesterday for a bail hearing. Associate Judge David Wiseman imposed a $10,000 cash bail for his temporary liberty and set the preliminary hearing for Aug. 17 at 9am.

Detective Regino M. Celis Jr. stated in his report that an 18-year-old male was inside his home with another person when they heard a man shouting for them outside the house Saturday at 11:33pm.

Department of Public Safety spokesman Jason Tarkong said Kalen broke the driver's side window of the teenager's Toyota pickup truck and damaged the metal frame pedestal of an IT&E phone box.

Kalen then left the area and returned armed with a .410 caliber shotgun.

The teenager tried to calm Kalen down but the defendant pointed the gun at him and threatened to shoot him. The victim held on to the front end of the barrel and pointed it away from him.

When police officers arrived, Kalen ran off and hid behind a lemon tree.

Police arrested him. The gun and its bullets were later found in the area.

Torres: Zoning system must work with landowners and developers

By NAZARIO RODRIGUEZ JR.
n_rodriguez@saipantribune.com
REPORTER

Rep. Stanley Torres said what is needed is a zoning system that works with landowners and developers of Saipan, instead of one that hampers their every move. He said zoning needs to be user-friendly and must address the needs of the community.

"It does neither right now. So get off your duff and get working on a usable system. ... Try spending less time writing to the newspapers and more about making your agency perform as intended," Torres said in a statement titled "How long will it last?" that was presented before yesterday's House session.

Torres said the Saipan Zoning Law of 2008 is not working out as planned. He proposes a six-month delay in the implementation of the law while it is re-drafted and a workable system is put in place.

"This is not the end of the world; this is just reasonable planning," he noted.

Torres said the former zoning administrator, Steve Tilley, left Saipan "after contriving a bogged down and unworkable system."

"If the new zoning administrator does not get it right, why, he too will be on a plane back to the U.S. mainland while we remain here, stuck with a plan that hampers instead of helps," said Torres referring to Victor Barrett, who replaced Tilley starting June 22.

Barrett had said that suspending the law could lead to a similar experience in New Orleans in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina when the zoning law's suspension resulted in the construction of a debris landfill in the heart of an Asian community.

Torres said that Saipan does not need a system cut-and-pasted from zoning laws made for a huge urban city.

"What we need is a system that works with out landowners and developers, not one that hampers their every move and creates ivory tower unworkable plans," Torres said.

He believes the law needs to be amended.

Torres said if zoning staffers fail to come up with a solution in six months, he will continue offering legislation to delay the law's implementation "until they get it right."

Torres said this project is too important to get it wrong. "Scare tactics of dumps in the middle of our town are ridiculous," he added.

He said other agencies like the Coastal Resources Management, Division of Environmental Quality and Department of Public Lands are in place to perform appropriate permitting for suspect land use.

"Impossible waiting lists, inflexible rules and plans that disrupt businesses and try to relocate others to impossible locations are what we have right now," Torres said.

He said this system must change so the people of the CNMI would benefit from reasonable zoning regulations and enforcement.

WIC starts issuing vouchers for new food packages

By NAZARIO RODRIGUEZ JR.
n_rodriguez@saipantribune.com
REPORTER

The Women, Infants and Children program of the Department of Public Health has started issuing vouchers for its new food packages.

WIC program clinic manager Dianne C. Esplin said the new food package would be redeemed starting Oct. 1.

However, the WIC program office is closed this week due to the ongoing seminar on breast-feeding at the Tanapag Head Start from Aug. 10-14.

What is exciting about this new food guide, Esplin said, is that WIC families will be getting fresh fruits and vegetables and whole grains in their monthly food package.

Fresh fruits and vegetables will also be redeemable at authorized Farmers Market vendors in addition to the regular WIC stores.

The new and improved WIC foods are divided into five categories:

- 1) for moms-to-be;
- 2) for mom and baby (formula feeding);
- 3) for mom and bay (breast-feeding);
- 4) for mom and baby (some breastfeeding/some formula); and
- 5) for children

For moms-to-be, the new WIC food supply will help the mother and the baby meet today's nutrition needs as recommended by healthcare providers during pregnancy.

The new WIC foods are lower in fat and higher in fiber, improve the variety of foods available and promote healthy weight gain for the mom and the baby.

The mom will receive 36 ounces of iron-fortified cereal and a pound of whole wheat bread or a pound of brown rice. She will also get an $8 cash value voucher for vegetables and fruits, three 12-ounce can frozen vitamin C-rich juices, 22 quart skim milk, a pound of dried beans and peas, 18 ounces peanut butter, and a dozen eggs.

For children, the new WIC foods are also lower in fat and higher in fiber, offer a variety to help with picky eating habits and help maintain a healthy weight for the child.

The package includes 36-ounce boxes of iron-fortified cereal, two pounds of whole wheat bread or other whole grain options.

It also includes 16 quarts of skim milk (whole milk for 1-2 years old) and more allowed substitutions. The protein includes a pound of dried beans and peas or 18 ounces peanut butter and a dozen eggs.

Temporary storage sought for cartons of books and clothing

The Helping-Hands Books & Donation Center on Tinian is looking for a temporary shelter where it can store about 70-80 cartons until it finds another building for the center.

The center was permanently closed on Aug. 4 due to the lack of support from the local government of Tinian.

maia, an American poet and essayist who runs the center, is now looking for another location to put up the center where local leaders are willing to support it.

She said the temporary storage space would have to be dry and clean, so if the boxes have to wait for a few months to find a new home, the contents would not be ruined by weather or bugs.

maia said an empty store would be ideal.

She also needs a truck and volunteers to move the cartons, which should be ready by the end of the week.

Those who are willing to help may come to the center, just behind the Tinian Mayor's Office, any time or they may call 433-9993.

Last week, people offered their help upon learning that the center had been closed down and are now doing what they can to find another building.

maia said there has been no luck so far, but she is not giving up on Tinian unless some other place offers to fund the center. (Saipan Tribune)

Rota Eco-Camp fosters environmental stewardship

ROTA—Rota's conservation areas acted as classrooms this summer for more than 50 local students participating in the 4th Rota Eco-Camp.

The elementary and middle school students learned from wildlife biologists, forestry officials, cultural experts, and more as they experienced first-hand the importance and value of conservation.

Together they engaged in activities such as hiking to the top of Wedding Cake Mountain and learning about the endangered fruit bat and planting hundreds of seedlings at the Talakahaya Watershed Re-vegetation site.

The eco-camp, which took place July 28 to July 31, covered topics including marine conservation, watershed protection, endangered species and habitat preservation. Throughout the camp, students learned how they can contribute to conservation efforts.

"I could tell other people not to burn the plants. I can plant everywhere. I can stop touching corals and I can stop throwing trash on the side of the road," sixth-grade student Fidel Manglona said in response to what actions he can take to help protect the areas he visited.

Organizers surveyed the students for knowledge gained from the experience. The responses will be evaluated in the coming weeks. The findings will provide valuable input on how to improve the educational component of the program.

For the past three years, the camp has provided students on the island with experiential learning aimed at increasing their capacity to understand human impacts on the environment, and the importance of ensuring sustainability.

2009 Rota Eco-camp participants and leaders received certificates for their participation in the conservation education camp. They posed together for a photo after the closing ceremony.

Students departed from West Harbor with Rubin Rota Scuba Center and snorkeled at Pinatang. Following the swim, they learned about marine protected areas and marine monitoring from Carlos Ketebangang, Division of Environmental Quality.

"It is a great way to educate our children about the environment—both the marine life and the wildlife surrounding our islands in the CNMI," said Joey Quitugua, who helped sponsor the camp. "As a child growing up in a traditional lifestyle, I've come to appreciate the island of Rota as a food source to our family. We must protect our surroundings so that our children can benefit from it for many years to come."

The environmental education camp was coordinated by the Division of Environmental Quality with support from dozens of volunteers and public and private groups on Rota and Saipan. 'Move class suit in California to NMI'

The garment manufacturers and retailers named in the $1 billion class action suit filed in California asked the Central District Court Monday to transfer the case to the federal district court of the Northern Marianas, saying this venue would be more convenient for both parties. The defendants argued that the plaintiffs, witnesses, documents, evidence, and all conditions relating to the case are all on Saipan. By contrast, none of the plaintiffs and witnesses are in California, the defendants stated in the motion to transfer venue. "Little, if any, evidence is in California," they added.

$1.25 M settlement forged

Four retailers included in the $1 billion class action suit filed in California announced Monday their decision to sign a $1.25 million settlement agreement with human rights groups and the law firm that represents garment workers. Nordstrom, J. Crew, Cutter & Buck and Gymboree were the first retailers to settle the lawsuit contesting alleged sweatshop conditions in the garment industry on Saipan. Under the settlement, U.S. retailers have agreed in their future contracts to require independent monitoring of their Saipan contractors.

Delinquent borrowers face CDA foreclosure

Amid the increase in delinquency rate, the Commonwealth Development Authority will foreclose the properties of those who have continuously ignored to settle their loans with the government lending agency. The CDA board has agreed to push through with the foreclosure proceedings after it has given up hopes to recover money from borrowers who have failed to meet their financial obligations, said Executive Director Marylou S. Ada. Ms. Ada said the cash flow of the agency has been depleting at a fast rate thus, the need to collect payment to allow other loan applicants borrow money.

DPS taps Hong Kong Interpol

The Department of Public Safety has sought the help of the Hong Kong Interpol to provide them with information regarding the slain Hong Kong Chinese national and his possible killers. The police agency has written to the Hong Kong Interpol recently to help them assist in establishing leads, according to sources from the department. No arrest has been made so far by the authorities. This was revealed after the Federal Bureau of Investigation has stepped into the murder case to help the local police in apprehending the killers of Mr. Tse, who was shot in a restaurant in Chalan Piao.

NMI gets more food stamp funding

The United States and CNMI governments have signed the Memorandum of Understanding that would authorize the release of more than $7 million in aid to low-income families in the Commonwealth under the Nutrition Assistance Program. Gov. Juan N. Babauta and Cultural Affairs Secretary Juan L. Babauta signed the MOU on behalf of the CNMI. The agreement involves an estimated $7.1 million grant that will cover the full request made by NAP for financial year 2003. The grant will come from the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Food and Nutrition Services.

US territories in spotlight

It's a go for the Department of the Interior's Investment Development Conference for the Territories, which will highlight investment opportunities in the U.S. territories and enable territory leaders to meet with the nation's top investors for one-on-one meetings. The conference, a brainchild of Interior Secretary Gale Norton, is set for September 8 at the Ronald Reagan Building in Washington D.C. and will highlight the excellent business opportunities that investors can avail of in the CNMI, Guam, the U.S. Virgin Islands, and American Samoa.

CNMI, Guam sign 'white paper'

Gov. Juan N. Babauta and Guam Gov. Felix Camacho both signed a "white paper" Friday that affirmed the Marianas region's support for the U.S. military presence in the Pacific and outlined the role that both the CNMI and Guam could play should the military increase its presence in the region. Babauta left the CNMI for Guam Friday morning to attend the signing ceremony, at the invitation of Camacho.

Justice Sotomayor

At 3:15 P.M. Thursday, Aug. 6, the nation witnessed the confirmation of its first Hispanic justice to the Supreme Court. By a vote of 68 to 31, Sonia Maria Sotomayor, daughter of the Bronx and Puerto Rico, became the 111th person and only the third woman to join the highest court in the land.

The vote brought with it several other firsts: the first time in some four decades of service on Capitol Hill that Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., was unable to cast a vote on a Supreme Court nomination; the first time in their three decades of judging nominees that Republican Sens. Orrin Hatch, Utah, and Charles Grassley, Iowa, felt compelled to vote no; the first time in its 138-year history that the National Rifle Association will factor the vote on a Supreme Court nominee in its annual report card on lawmakers and gun rights.

The moment will be remembered above all as a triumph for Justice Sotomayor, who refused to let financially humble beginnings define or restrict her in any way. She comes to the high court with as well-rounded a resume as any justice of the past century: Princeton undergrad, Yale Law, prosecutor, corporate litigator, trial court judge and appeals court jurist. The American Bar Association bestowed on her a unanimous well-qualified rating.

Yet 31 Republicans could not bring themselves to vote for her. Some criticized her vote against white firefighters in a reverse-discrimination case. Others were concerned about her decision against two New York state property owners whose land was seized by a township and handed over to a private developer intent on building a shopping center. Others worried that she was not sympathetic enough to the rights of gun owners.

These senators were within their rights to dislike the outcomes, but they were wrong to overlook the fact that in each of these cases Judge Sotomayor either followed settled law or appropriately exercised judgment that was well within the mainstream. And still there is the lingering question, fairly asked of everyone poised to ascend those marble steps: What kind of justice will she be now that the burdens of precedent are no longer absolute? The answer will be revealed only in time. We would hope that any justice would come to the bench free of personal prejudice or agenda; we would also hope that she would follow the law faithfully even while understanding that she will often be called on to exercise judgment to ensure that cramped interpretations don't defy common sense and crowd out justice.

Judge Sotomayor has done this for the past 17 years. We trust that Justice Sotomayor will continue to follow this humble and honorable path.

The news Americans need

You don't have to care about media companies or reporters to care about the state of the news, because if it's in trouble—and it surely is—this country is in trouble. That's why, while speaking recently at the Aspen Institute, I called upon President Obama to form a commission to address the perilous state of America's news media.

Some might scoff at the notion that a president and a country occupied by two wars and a recession should add the woes of the news media to an already crowded plate. But the way the news is delivered, and the quality of the information the American public receives about what's going on here and abroad, has and will continue to have a profound effect on these very issues and on the overall quality of government by, for and of the people.

I am not calling for any sort of government bailout for media companies. Nor am I encouraging any form of government control over them. I want the president to convene a nonpartisan, blue-ribbon commission to assess the state of the news as an institution and an industry and to make recommendations for improving and stabilizing both.

Why bring the president into it? Because this is the only way I could think of to generate the sort of attention this subject deserves. Academia and think tanks generate study after study, yet their findings don't reach the people who need to be reached.

We need a real and broad public discussion of the role news is meant to play in our democratic system of government and a better public understanding of the American news infrastructure's fragile condition. We need to know how things got this way and what we need to change.

An intense period of corporate consolidation over the past 25 years, aided and abetted by deregulation by the Federal Communications Commission, has reduced to a mere handful the sources from which most Americans get their news. While independent reporting has been winnowed and homogenized, the news organizations responsible for this reporting have largely fallen under corporate mandates to increase profits quarterly—which has meant a reduction in news-gathering personnel, the shuttering of overseas bureaus and the nearly complete subordination of a public trust to the profit motive.

Moreover, corporate values of risk aversion have increasingly filtered down to newsrooms, supplanting news values. The big conglomerates that own most of America's news media may have, at any given moment, multiple regulatory, procurement and legislative matters before various arms of the federal government; their interests, therefore, can often run contrary to the interests of the citizens whom journalism, at its best, is meant to serve. There is little incentive to report without fear or favoritism on the same government one is trying to lobby. Increasingly, the news we get—and, significantly, the news we don't get—reflects this conflict of interests.

The news infrastructure, weakened from within by this corrosive dynamic, is at risk of toppling altogether because of a separate, though not unrelated development: the coast-to-coast collapse of the newspaper industry, which has lost the key revenue streams of classified and local advertising to the Internet.

For radio, television and, yes, the Internet, newspapers have been and continue to be the foundation on which "hard" news rests. They provide the reporters who are our primary and often our only independent sources in places as close as city zoning hearings and as far away as Indonesia. Anyone who has worked in other media knows that, if newspapers are taken out of the equation, dwindling news resources will be stretched to the breaking point.

You will not turn on your television and hear an anchor admit this. What you will see, instead, is more opinion, commentary and marketing masquerading as news. You will get more in-studio shouting matches between partisans, moderated by openly partisan talking heads.

And so shows that can be produced on the cheap, with little to no real reporting, fan impotent citizen anger at a government whose workings, absent hard-hitting reporting, seem ever-more opaque—and at a world that, absent consistent, contextualized coverage, seems to defy comprehension.

We need news that breeds understanding, not contempt; news that fosters a healthy skepticism of the workings of power rather than a paralyzing cynicism. We need the basic information that a self-governing people requires. The old news model is crumbling, while the Internet, for all its immense promise, is not yet ready to rise in its place—and won't be until it can provide the nuts-and-bolts reporting that most people so take for granted that it escapes their notice.

This is a crisis that, with no exaggeration, threatens our democratic republic at its core. But you won't hear about it on your evening news, unless the message can be delivered in a way that corporate media have little choice but to report—such as, say, the findings of a presidential commission.

Morrison asks: Vincent Bugliosi

By PATT MORRISON
(C) 2009, LOS ANGELES TIMES

Vincent Bugliosi has moved on, but the world hasn't. Forty years after the impossibly grisly Tate-LaBianca murders, he is still "the Manson prosecutor."

His book about the murders masterminded by Charles Manson, Helter Skelter, written with coauthor Curt Gen- try, hasn't been out of print since it appeared in 1974. It's blurred as the best-selling true-crime book of all time, at what Bugliosi figures is about 7 million copies. His 2007 JFK book, Reclaiming History, got its start in a 1986 mock trial on television, in which Bugliosi prosecuted Lee Harvey Oswald, using actual assassination witnesses, and proved that Oswald alone killed the president. It has sold consider- ably fewer copies than Helter Skelter, but, as he says, "If you want to make money, you don't put out a book that weighs 7 1/2 pounds and costs $57 and has over 10,000 citations and a million and a half words."

Bugliosi still writes voluminously—and without a com- puter—but he has had to put down his pen for the moment because journalists like me are swarming around, asking for his insights, 40 years on, about the 1969 slaughters, now known the world over as the Manson murders, and their chief instigator, the hideously and evidently perpetu- ally fascinating Charles Manson.

Question: Aren't you tired of people asking about Manson?

Answer: I've actually had a copilot come out of the cockpit on a trip from L.A. to New York and ask me about Charles Manson. I was at a book convention, in a cab—on one side of me was Arthur Schlesinger, on the other side was William Manchester, real heavyweights. All they were doing was asking me about Charles Manson. The only thing that enables me not to be bored is the people talking about it—they're so interested. The durability of this case is just incredible.

Q: Why? There have been more prolific murderers and gor- ier killings since then.

A: Many factors. The single most important is that the murders were probably the most bizarre in American crime, and people are fascinated by things that are strange and bizarre. It's not the brutal- ity—they were extremely brutal murders, but like you say, there have been more brutal murders. Not the prominence of the victims. Another reason—the very name "Manson" has become a metaphor for evil, and evil has its allure.

Q: So he has become the Hitler of murderers, by which all other murderers are measured?

A: You said it—I can't say that. Just one (example) among many: Mike Tyson's applying for renewing his boxing license before the boxing commission in Nevada. He says, "Look, I'm a bad guy, but I'm not Charles Manson." His name is used in that context. Now (O.J.) Simpson—you don't hear (that) about the Simpson case. It was kind of a garden-variety case. The Manson case just never ends.

Q: What do you make of the enduring cottage industry of Manson shirts, music, posters?

A: He's got this image, almost a glamorous outlaw type, an anti-es- tablishment figure, like (John) Dillinger or Jesse James, but (kids) really don't know who he is. They don't know how evil he is. I think if they really knew who Manson was, they would not be wearing those shirts.

Q: In 1972, the Supreme Court overturned the death penalty, including those in the Manson case. Are you sorry he and the others weren't executed?

A: Well, that would have been the proper sentence. The execu- tion of a condemned man is a terrible thing, but murder is an even more terrible thing. They deserved to die, these people, and

I asked for the death penalty and I would do so again. I don't know if "sorry" is a good word—I'm disappointed, of course, particularly with respect to Manson.

Q: Yet you also supported Manson family member Susan At- kins' parole request not long ago, and got a lot of grief for it.

A: The visceral response would be, "Well, she showed no mercy so she gets no mercy." But there are several things which militate against that easy conclusion. She's already paid substantially for her crime, close to 40 years behind bars. She has terminal cancer. The mercy she was asking for is so minuscule. She's about to die. It's not like we're going to see her down at Disneyland.

Q: If you were writing your own Wikipedia entry, what would you put first?

Bugliosi

A: I guess it would be (Manson). It's a shorthand way of defining me, no matter what else I do. I can no more sepa- rate myself than I can jump away from my own shadow, and it tends to dominate the other things I've done.

Q: What are you proudest of?

A: Certainly my magnum opus, Reclaiming History. It's the most important murder case in American history. I put the best of what I know as a prosecutor into that book. It was just moonshine, these conspiracies. All these allegations made no sense whatsoever, so I decided to set the record straight. Oswald killed Kennedy. He acted alone. Because of these conspiracy theorists who split hairs and proceeded to split the split hairs, this case has been transformed into the most complex mur- der case in world history. But, at its core, it's a simple case.

Q: The Betrayal of America, attacking the 5-4 Supreme Court decision in the disputed 2000 presidential election—not at first blush a case for a criminal prosecutor.

A: I'm not a political activist. But whenever something is so egre- gious, I jump in. Even many Republican scholars (said), "The court should be ashamed of itself; we've lost respect for the court." And I kept saying, "That's all? You lost respect?" These five (justices) are among the biggest criminals in American history. How dare these people have the audacity to do what they did? I think I made my case pretty well that these people deliberately tried to steal the election.

Q: And now your latest book, The Prosecution of George W. Bush for Murder, published in May, makes a murder case against Bush for waging war unnecessarily and shows how he could be prosecuted for it.

A: Bush (told) unsuspecting Americans the exact opposite of what his own federal intelligence agencies told him. What could be more criminal than the Bush administration keeping the all-impor- tant conclusion from Congress and the American people, with the lives of millions in the balance?

Every day, I think of those people in their graves now—no one is fighting for them. You can see that I'm upset. I don't like to see anyone get away with murder. O.J. Simpson got away with two, and I wrote the book Outrage. If I can get that angry over one or two murders, you can imagine the way I feel about Bush.

Q: Some people must have said, "Bugliosi's gone off the deep end on this one."

A: (California Attorney General) Jerry Brown called me: "I understand you have a book out about Bush, about impeachment," and I said, "No, Jerry, it's about murder."

My first challenge was to see if a president taking the nation to war on a lie fell within the conventional principles of criminal law, and I've come up with very solid evidence that it does. There are many sophisticated issues, but here's the main issue. I've estab- lished jurisdiction, federal and local. If a prosecutor could prove that Bush took this nation to war under false pretenses, then these killings of American soldiers in Iraq would become unlawful and therefore murder.

Q: I get the feeling you wish reporters were coming to your door to talk about your Bush book instead of Manson.

A: Oh, absolutely. I would much prefer to talk about this, but people don't want to.

Q: You have a theory about why the book didn't get much publicity.

A: I had a very difficult time getting this book published, and I've never had trouble getting a book published. I couldn't get on any networks, no cable. Everyone has been terrified to talk about this. My only master, my only mistress, is the facts. If a Democratic president had done this, I would have written the same identical book, so it has nothing to do with politics. I'm 95 percent sure the left in this country is terrified of the right. The right has no fear of the left—the left is terrified of the right.

Q: What do you think of televising trials?

A: We should not televise trials. There's only one purpose for a crim- inal trial. It's to determine whether or not the defendant committed the crime. Anything that interferes or has the potential of interfering with that should automatically be prohibited. The idea of education is non- sense. Televise an automobile-collision case or breach-of-contract case and see how many people watch. It's all about entertainment.

Letters to the Editor

Apology

Dear CNMI residents: Hafa Adai and greetings to you all. My name is Jayna Taitano, a U.S. citizen resident in the CNMI. I wrote this letter to ask you for forgiveness for my mistake of fraud marriage with Bashar Mohammad Abdul on the date of March 13, 2009. I realize and understand that my mistake has brought shame to myself and my family. My family doesn't de- scribe this shame but I.

I don't really mean to do this but I was not being smart. My son's father does not have a job, so I thought doing this would support my son, but it wasn't a good idea. My mistake caused me to experience difficulties and hardship in my life with my family. I went to court for the offense of fraud marriage that I had committed. I am also currently serving time on probation for the offense that I have done to you.

I'm ordered by the court to pay a fine for my offense and I will be doing community work service to change and improve my life, which is the least I can do. I have learned from this mistake and will be a better mother from now on. I will be regretting this for my life. Do I understand my wrongdoing? Yes, I do. I feel ashamed for what my mistake has brought to my family's name. I wish and hope you understand why I am writing this letter.

Before ending this letter, once again I humbly ask for your forgiveness and I apologize for the mistake I have done. To be sure this won't happen again, I love my son and family. I thank you all for your time.

Krugman says world avoided second Great Depression

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia (AP)—Aggressive stimulus spending by governments helped the world avoid a second Great Depression but full economic recovery will take two years or more, Nobel Prize-winning economist Paul Krugman said Monday.

Krugman said the worst of the global crisis was over with economic and exports growth showing signs of stabilization. Still, recovery was likely to be “disappointing” as government spending wasn’t sustainable in the long-run and unemployment rate still lagging behind, he told a two-day world capital markets conference here.

There isn’t likely to be any “Phoenix-like” recovery such as in the 1997-98 Asian financial crisis, where the economies expanded dramatically, led by a sharp rebound in exports, he said.

“We have managed to avoid a second Great Depression ... but full recovery is at least two years and probably more,” Krugman said.

Asia is likely to see a faster rebound, than the U.S. and Europe, partly driven by the recovery in manufacturing exports, he said.

Nobel Prize-winning economist Paul Krugman speaks during a press conference at the World Capital Markets Symposium in Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, Monday, Aug. 10, 2009.

In the clearest sign yet that the recession may be ending, the U.S. Labor Department last Friday showed the jobless rate in the world’s largest economy dipped for the first time in 15 months while workers’ hours and pay edged upward.

It said a net total of 247,000 jobs were lost last month, the fewest in a year and a drastic improvement from the 443,000 that vanished in June. Still, the job market remains shaky. A quarter-million lost jobs are a far cry from the employment growth needed to put the nationon solid footing.

President Barack Obama has urged Americans to be patient and give time for his $787 billion stimulus package of tax cuts and increased government spending to take hold. Most of the money will flow in 2010.

Krugman said there was still room for the U.S. government to increase spending to boost growth, despite concerns over its swollen budget deficit.

Krugman, who teaches at Princeton University, won the Nobel Prize in Economic Sciences last year for his analysis of how economies of scale can affect international trade patterns. He also writes columns for The New York Times.

He said there was a need to restructure the global financial system and impose tighter regulations to avoid a repeat of the economic crisis, but expressed concern that the momentum for reforms appeared to be easing.

“We do not have the political will to do that just yet ... I suspect clever people can still make a lot of money from the financial system in the next few years,” he warned.

EBay, GM set to start car-selling trial Tuesday

SAN FRANCISCO (AP)—General Motors and eBay Inc. are expected to announce Monday that hundreds of the auto maker’s California dealers will let consumers haggle over the prices of new cars and trucks through the online marketplace, as part of a previously disclosed trial.

About 225 of California’s 250 GM dealers are set to take part in the program, which will begin on Tuesday. They will be selling Buick, Chevrolet, GMC and Pontiac vehicles on cobranded Web sites through eBay’s online auto marketplace, eBay Motors, until Sept. 8. The cars will also be searchable through eBay Motors and eBay’s main site.

The trial is part of Detroit-based GM’s turnaround plan, making more official a practice some of its dealers had already participated in on their own. It expands an existing partnership covering GM certified used vehicles sold through eBay.

It also marks a shift for San Jose, Calif.-based eBay, since most of the vehicles sold on eBay Motors—a site that sells various types of vehicles and auto parts—have traditionally been used.

Starting Tuesday, eBay visitors will be able to visit Web pages like gm.ebay.com and chevy.ebay.com, where they can browse new 2008 and 2009 vehicles, ask dealers questions and figure out financing.

The cobranded sites will also include a Web tool currently on eBay Motors that helps shoppers determine if they’re qualified to trade in their old car for money toward a new one under the government’s just-refilled “cash-for-clunkers” stimulus program.

Car buyers will be able to choose between the two standard options currently offered on eBay Motors: Negotiating a price with a dealer through the site or purchasing right then at a fixed price. Cars will be picked up at the dealerships.

EBay Motors Vice President Rob Chesney said the companies decided to run the trial in California because there are many tech-savvy consumers there. EBay users who live outside California can contact dealers to see if they’re willing to sell and ship vehicles to them, he said.

The test comes a month after GM made an unusually quick exit from bankruptcy protection with ambitions of becoming profitable and building cars people are eager to buy. Once the world’s largest and most powerful automaker, new GM is now leaner, cleansed of massive debt and burdensome contracts that would have sunk it without additional federal loans.

Fed likely to keep key interest rate at record low

WASHINGTON (AP)—With the economy strengthening but still fragile, Federal Reserve policymakers are expected to hold a key lending rate at a record low this week and will weigh whether to extend some programs that were created to ease the financial crisis.

Fed Chairman Ben Bernanke and his colleagues also are likely to signal that while the recession is winding down, the pain isn’t over.

Though the unemployment rate dipped to 9.4 percent in July—its first drop in 15 months—economists predict it will start climbing again. Many, including people in the Obama administration and at the Fed, say it could still top 10 percent this year.

For months, consumers have pulled back on spending and borrowing. To try to stimulate economic activity, Fed policymakers are all but certain to keep the target range for its bank lending rate between zero and 0.25 percent at the end of their two-day meeting Wednesday.

That means commercial banks’ prime lending rate, used to peg rates on home equity loans, certain credit cards and other consumer loans, will stay around 3.25 percent, the lowest rate in decades.

Fed policymakers also will probably pledge anew to keep rates there for “an extended period,” which economists interpret to mean through the rest of the year and into part of 2010.

BUSINESS BRIEFS

Oil hovers near $71 as investors eye US consumers

SINGAPORE (AP)—Oil prices hovered near $71 a barrel Monday in Asia as investors looked to signs later this week of the U.S. consumers’ health. Benchmark crude for September delivery was up 17 cents to $71.10 a barrel by midday in Singapore in electronic trading on the New York Mercantile Exchange. On Friday, the contract fell $1.01 to settle at $70.93. Crude prices have fluttered near $71 a barrel and $72 for about a week as investors try to gauge how strong a U.S. economic recovery will be this year. The government said Friday that the unemployment rate fell to 9.4 percent in June, but gasoline demand has been weak this summer.

Survey: Gas prices nationwide jump 16 cents

CAMARILLO, Calif. (AP)—The U.S. price of gasoline jumped nearly 16 cents a gallon during the past two weeks to $2.64. That’s according to the national Lundberg Survey of fuel prices released Sunday. Analyst Trilby Lundberg says it appears the rate of increase is slowing. The latest average price of regular gasoline is $1.20 below the price at the same time last year. The average price for a gallon of mid-grade was $2.77. Premium was at $2.88. Charleston, S.C., had the lowest price, $2.38 for a gallon for regular. Honolulu was the highest at $3.07.

Consumer protections lost in health care debate

WASHINGTON (AP)—It’s one issue in the health care debate that nearly everyone—even the insurance lobby—seems to agree on: Better consumer protections are needed to end the nightmare of not being able to get covered for a treatable, if costly, illness. Yet such practical considerations are being overlooked in a debate that’s become a passionate argument about the government’s reach and role in medical matters. Experts say the bills before Congress include significant consumer protections that would end denial or cancellation of coverage for medical reasons, from high cholesterol to cancer.

Small is beautiful (and successful) for newspapers

Newspapers are hurting all over the United States, but the pain is less severe at small publications like The Blackshear Times in Georgia.

The weekly newspaper fills an information vacuum in a county of 17,000 people who live about 75 miles from the closest metropolitan market, in Jacksonville, Fla. That has made it easier for The Times to hold on to its 3,500 subscribers and keep its revenue stable in a recession that’s ravaging much of the newspaper industry.

“CNN is not coming to my town to cover the news and there aren’t a whole lot of bloggers here either,” said Robert M. Williams Jr., The Times’ editor and publisher. “Community newspapers are still a great investment because we provide something you can’t get anywhere else.”

The scarcity of other media in small- and medium-sized cities has helped shield hundreds of newspapers from the upheaval that’s causing dailies in big cities to shrink in size and scope as their print circulations and advertising sales decline.

Less competition means the print editions and Web sites of smaller newspapers remain the focal points for finding out what’s happening in their coverage areas.

In contrast, large newspapers carry more national news, as well as local, and have many competitors, including Web sites and television and radio stations. They report much of the news the day before printed newspapers reach homes and newsstands. Large newspapers’ Web sites also provide the news for free a day ahead of print editions.

Perhaps even more important, newspapers in smaller markets still haven’t lost a big chunk of their revenue to Craigslist and other online classified advertising alternatives that have become the bane of large newspapers.

Print ads for everything from jobs to jalopies were a gold mine for newspapers until Craigslist began expanding an online service for free classified ads in 1999. Today, Craigslist blankets most major metropolitan markets while publishing about 40 million classified ads each month. (AP)

Liberian official meets with young rape victim

PHOENIX (AP)—Liberia's deputy ambassador to the U.S. said Sunday that he tried to console an 8-year-old rape victim in Phoenix with hugs and a teddy bear in a case that has gripped Liberians worldwide. Deputy Ambassador Edwin Sele said the girl, a Liberian refugee, cried heavily during their meeting on Saturday and that she needs to be reunited with her family to get the best care possible. "I talked with her, and I took her a teddy bear," he said. "She was very distressed. She's really traumatized. ... She cried so bitterly that I almost cried."

Wait for sex and marriage? Evangelicals conflicted

When Margie and Stephen Zumbun were battling the urge to have premarital sex, a pastor counseled them to control themselves. The couple signed a purity covenant. Then, when the two got engaged and Margie went wedding dress shopping, a salesperson called her "the bride who looks like she's 12." Nonchurch friends said that, at 22, she was rushing things. The agonizing message to a young Christian couple in love: Sex can wait, but so can marriage. "It's unreasonable to say, 'Don't do anything ... and wait until you have degrees and you're in your 30s to get married,'" said Margie Zumbun, who did wait for sex, and married Stephen fresh out of Purdue University. "I think that's just inviting people to have sex and feel like they're bad people for doing it." (AP)

Felicia weakens to tropical storm near Hawaii

HONOLULU (AP)—Hawaii braced for Tropical Storm Felicia on Sunday, taking no chances even though the storm weakened rapidly as it slipped toward the islands. Felicia was downgraded to a tropical storm with maximum sustained winds of 50 mph with higher gusts. It's expected to weaken even more before hitting Hawaii late Monday or early Tuesday, when it is expected to be either a tropical storm or depression. The Central Pacific Hurricane Center said the storm's center was about 445 miles east-northeast of Hilo and 610 miles east of Honolulu as of 5 p.m. HST.

7 bodies pulled from Hudson after midair collision

HOBOKEN, N.J. (AP)—Divers pulled a helicopter and four more bodies out of the murky Hudson River on Sunday in their search for victims, wreckage and explanations from a midair collision of a sightseeing helicopter and a small plane that killed nine people.

The dead from Saturday's crash include three fathers and their three teenage sons. The private plane carried a family from Pennsylvania, and the helicopter held five Italian tourists celebrating a couple's 25th wedding anniversary.

The plane approached the helicopter, which had just taken off for a 12-minute tour, from behind and clipped it with a wing, witnesses said. Both aircraft split apart and fell into the river.

Searchers fought swift currents, dealt with visibility as low as one foot, and dodged debris dumped along the river bottom as they brought four more bodies on to boats. One was found in the fuselage of the helicopter, New Jersey State Police Sgt. Stephen Jones said. Two bodies remained missing.

A U.S. Army Corps of Engineers crane lifted the twisted wreckage of the helicopter from 30 feet of water. Nearby, a sonar scanner found the small plane wreckage, New York City police said. More plane wreckage was found farther out in the river under about 50 feet of water.

The collision happened in the same stretch of the Hudson where a US Airways jet landed safely seven months ago. It was the worst air disaster in New York City since a commercial jet crash in Queens killed 265 people in November 2001.

The searches went on as a steady stream of tour boats floated down the Hudson. Restrictions put in place after the crash kept sightseeing helicopter tours grounded Sunday.

Obama presses for new tone in US relations with Mexico

GUADALAJARA, Mexico (AP)—President Barack Obama pressed for a new tone in the United States' relationship with Mexico but found no immediate progress Sunday on the divisions between him and Mexican President Felipe Calderon over the pace of U.S. drug-fighting aid and a ban on Mexican trucks north of the border.

Obama kicked off his second trip to Mexico as president with a friendly 45-minute meeting with Calderon that touched on the vast trade relationship between their two countries, their cooperation on swine flu and the violent Mexican gangs dominating the drug trade on both sides of the border. Their talks came before the start of a lightning-quick three-way summit between the United States, Mexico and Canada.

Often called the "Three Amigos" summit, the meeting of Obama, Calderon and Canadian Prime Minister Stephen Harper began over dinner at a cultural institution in this town near the mountains. The summit's formal talks, the fifth for the three countries, were taking place Monday, followed by a joint appearance before reporters at midday.

During the separate sit-down between Obama and Calderon, the Mexican leader raised his concerns about the speed of implementation of the United States' three-year, $1.4 billion drug-fighting package known as the Merida Initiative. One $100 million installment is being delayed over rising concerns among some in Congress about the Mexican army's abuses.

The U.S. law requires Congress to withhold some funding unless the State Department reports Mexico is not violating human rights during its anti-cartel crackdown, which started in 2006.

Obama told Calderon that human rights is a major priority for him, but also assured him that the State Department is working to prepare a report that recognizes all Mexico's efforts to prevent abuses, said a senior administration official, who briefed reporters on condition of anonymity in order to more freely describe private meetings.

Drug violence has killed more than 11,000 people since Mexico launched its crackdown. Mexican cities are essentially under siege, and the killings are spilling over the border into the United States and as far as Canada.

Calderon also quizzed Obama on his earlier promise to restore a canceled pilot program that had allowed Mexican truckers to travel into the United States, the official said.

The North American Free Trade Agreement required the United States to grant Mexican trucks full access to its highways by January 2000, but domestic opposition stalled that plan until a 2007 pilot program allowed some trucks.

Immune system cancer found in young 9/11 officers

NEW YORK (AP)—Researchers say a small number of young law enforcement officers who participated in the World Trade Center rescue and cleanup operation have developed an immune system cancer.

The numbers are tiny, and experts don't know whether there is any link between the illnesses and toxins released during the disaster.

But doctors who coordinated the study, published Monday in the Journal of Occupational and Environmental Medicine, said people who worked at the site should continue to have their health monitored.

"What we are trying to get out there is: Be alert," said Dr. Jacqueline M. Moline, director of the World Trade Center Medical Monitoring and Treatment Program at the Mount Sinai School of Medicine.

The researchers looked at 28,252 emergency responders who spent time amid ground zero dust and found eight cases of multiple myeloma.

Those findings were no surprise. Multiple myeloma is the second most common hematological cancer in the U.S. after non-Hodgkin's lymphoma. Normally, researchers would expect to find about seven cases in a group as large as the one examined in the study.

However, four of the people who fell ill were under age 45, and multiple myeloma is thought to be more rare among people of that age. Under normal circumstances, researchers would have expected to find only one case of the disease in before noon on Saturday.

The plane was not required to have a flight plan and did not file one, said NTSB Chairman Debbie Hersman.

The plane was flying at about 1,100 feet at the time of the crash, she said. Below that altitude, planes in that part of the Hudson River corridor are to navigate visually. Above that, they need clearance from air traffic controllers.

The control tower at Teterboro handed off responsibility for the plane to the tower in Newark about a minute before the crash and told the pilot to contact Newark controllers, Hersman said. But the Newark officials never heard from the pilot.

Additionally, investigators were asking witnesses, thousands of whom were out enjoying a beautiful summer day when the aircraft went down, to provide photos and video capturing the crash and its immediate aftermath.

A pilot on the ground saw the plane approaching and tried to alert the helicopter. He radioed the doomed helicopter and said, "You have a fixed-wing behind you," but there was no response from the pilot, Hersman said.

About 250 inmates injured in riot at Calif. prison

LOS ANGELES (AP)—More than three dozen inmates were released from hospitals Sunday after being involved in a racially motivated riot that badly damaged a Southern California prison and forced the lockdown of nine others.

The riot that erupted Saturday night sent 55 prisoners to the hospital and injured more than 250 inmates in all, officials said. Thirty-eight inmates were treated and were expected to return to the California Institution for Men in Chino, east of Los Angeles, by late Sunday, said Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation spokesman George Kostyrko.

Most of the injuries were considered minor to moderate, including stab wounds and slashes. One inmate suffered a serious head injury, Kostyrko said. However, none of the injuries were considered life-threatening.

No staff members were injured in the disturbance, the largest since December 2006.

As many as 80 officers responded to the riot, which involved some 1,300 inmates in seven dormitory-style barracks. A fire that ignited during the chaos caused significant damage to one of the buildings, prison spokesman Lt. Mark Hargrove said. Prison officials couldn't say how the fire started.

Authorities believe the riot was prompted by tensions between black and Hispanic prisoners.

"It appears we had some southern Hispanic gang members targeting African Americans," Kostyrko said.

Officers used pepper spray, wielded batons and shot foam projectiles to remove inmates who had barricaded themselves inside the medium-security facility during the four-hour uprising. Police officers and firefighters also were called to help subdue the inmates. Eleven hours later, prison officials had cleared out the facility of disruptive inmates.

1 million evacuated as powerful typhoon hits China

BEIJING (AP)—A powerful typhoon toppled houses, flooded villages and forced nearly 1 million people to flee to safety on China's eastern coast before weakening into a tropical storm Monday.

Named Morakot, the storm struck after triggering the worst flooding in Taiwan in 50 years, leaving hundreds missing or unaccounted for and bringing down a six-story hotel. It earlier lashed the Philippines, killing at least 22 people.

Morakot, or emerald in Thai, slammed into China's Fujian province Sunday afternoon as a typhoon carrying heavy rain and winds of 74 miles (119 kilometers) per hour, according to the China Meteorological Administration. At least one child died after a house collapsed in Zhejiang province.

By early Monday, the storm packed winds of 52 miles per hour (83 kilometers per hour) and churned at about 6 mph (10 kph), it said.

Hundreds of villages and towns were flooded and more than 2,000 houses collapsed, the official Xinhua News Agency said.

People stumbled with flashlights as the storm enveloped the town of Beibi in Fujian in darkness, Xinhua said. Strong winds uprooted trees or snapped them apart, while farmers used buckets to catch fish swept out of fish farms by high waves.

Village officials in Zhejiang rode bicycles to hand out drinking water and instant noodles to residents stranded by deep floods, while rescuers tried to reach eight sailors on a cargo ship blown onto a reef off Fujian, Xinhua reported.

About 1 million people were evacuated from China's eastern coastal provinces.

Morakot hit Taiwan late Friday and crossed the island Saturday causing the worst flooding in half a century.

Authorities used helicopters to drop food Monday at mountainous Shiaolin village in southern Kaohsiung county, which was hit by a massive landslide. Bad weather prevented the helicopters from landing, and official Yang Chiu-hsing said rescuers were prevented from approaching Shiaolin by road because bridges and roads had been damaged by floods.

Taiwan's CTI and ETTV Cable News reported more than 100 houses in the community may have been buried in the landslide, leaving some 1,000 villagers unaccounted for.

Outside of Shiaolin, Taiwan's Disaster Relief Center said Morakot killed 12 people and another 52 were missing, including 14 people whose makeshift home was swept away. Two policemen were washed away while helping to evacuate villagers in southeastern Taitung county.

In this photo released by the Xinhua news agency, a man wades through the flooded street by home-made raft in Cangnan, east China's Zhejiang province, on Monday Aug. 10, 2009.

US, Pakistan increasingly believe Mehsud dead

ISLAMABAD (AP)—The U.S. and Pakistan are almost certain a U.S. missile strike killed the head of Pakistan's Taliban and that his death led to a fierce power struggle among his deputies, officials said Sunday, despite claims and counterclaims as to the fate of the country's most wanted man.

Government and intelligence officials, as well as some Taliban commanders and at least one rival militant, have said Baitullah Mehsud likely died in Wednesday's drone strike on his father-in-law's house in northwestern Pakistan's rugged, lawless tribal area near the Afghan border.

President Barack Obama's national security adviser, James Jones, said the U.S. was 90 percent confident Mehsud had been killed. But three Taliban commanders—Hakimullah, Qari Hussain, who is known for training suicide bombers, and Taliban spokesman Maulvi Umar—called AP reporters Saturday insisting Mehsud was alive.

Neither side has produced any concrete evidence, and the claims were impossible to verify.

There also were conflicting reports that a major fight had broken out between rival Taliban factions during a meeting, or shura, to select Mehsud's replacement, and that one or two of the most likely contenders—Hakimullah and Waliur Rehman—had either been killed or wounded.

The meeting was in the Waziristan region in Pakistan's tribal region, a mountainous area off-limits to journalists where the reach of the government is tenuous or nonexistent.

While it was unclear whether there had been a dispute at all—one Taliban commander, Noor Sayed, denied there had been any disagreement—any succession battle for the top slot in Pakistan's Taliban is likely to be fierce and potentially bloody.

Mehsud's Tehrik-e-Taliban Pakistan is not a single, cohesive group. Rather, it is a loose alliance of tribal groups that often have disputes and power struggles between each other, so removing the man who coordinated the factions could lead to intense rivalry over who would succeed him. It could be in the interests of top commanders to deny their leader was dead until they could agree on who would replace him.

UN: Violence hampering Afghan vote

KABUL (AP)—Insecurity in significant portions of Afghanistan has hindered election preparations and disproportionately affected Afghan women, a report co-authored by the U.N. mission in the country said Sunday.

Militant violence has risen steadily in the past three years, and a record number of U.S. and NATO troops are now in the country to combat it. Afghans will vote for president and provincial councils in a nationwide election Aug. 20, which the Taliban has vowed to disrupt.

Insecurity has already hampered candidates' ability to run for office and for election officials to prepare polling stations, the report said.

Violence has "severely limited freedom of movement and constrained freedom of expression for candidates and supporters, hampering their ability to campaign openly through public gatherings or door-to-door visits," the joint report from the U.N. mission and the Afghan Independent Human Rights Commission said.

"These restrictions have, in turn, created significant limitations on freedom of association and peaceful assembly, and amplified women's difficulties in participating in the electoral process," it said.

Sima Samar, chairwoman of the Afghan Independent Human Rights Commission, said three women provincial council candidates from Kandahar could not even live there because of security threats, and the report noted that only 39 percent of Afghans who registered for the election in 2008 or 2009 are women.

The report said insecurity in "significant" portions of the country would affect the vote. The top U.N. official in the country, Kai Eide, said he could not define what "significant" meant because the situation could change before voting day. The Interior Ministry has said 10 out of 360 Afghan districts are controlled by militants and that one third of the country is considered to be at high risk of violence.

U.S., European and Afghan officials say they expect minor instances of fraud and violence during the election, but that they hope such incidents are kept to a low enough level that the outcome is seen as legitimate. If voters in the violent south and east are kept from the polls, it could lower the number of votes President Hamid Karzai receives, boosting the chances of his top challenger, Abdullah Abdullah.

43 people killed in landslides in northern India

LUCKNOW, India (AP)—Landslides triggered by heavy rains killed at least 43 people in three remote villages in northern India, a police official said. Twenty bodies were pulled from the debris Sunday after the landslide buried the villages in Pithoragarh district of Uttarakhand state a day earlier, said S.M. Shamim, a paramilitary force commander. He said 43 people "were buried alive under the debris." Police and volunteers were digging through mud and rocks Sunday to recover the bodies of 23 others, he said.

12 killed, 10 missing as typhoon hits Japan

TOKYO (AP)—A typhoon slammed into Japan's west coast on Monday, bringing heavy rain that triggered floods and landslides and left at least 12 people dead and another 10 reported missing. Typhoon Etai killed 11 people in Hyogo prefecture, around 310 miles (500 kilometers) west of Tokyo, police official Shigekazu Kamenobu said. He could not provide details but said many were caught in raging waters. "At least one man was swept away in a river while he was in a car. His body was later found inside the vehicle," Kamenobu said.

China reports bomb threat on plane in Xinjiang

BEIJING (AP)—China's state news agency says there has been a bomb threat on a plane from Afghanistan scheduled to land in Xinjiang, the restive western region of China that was rocked by ethnic riots last month. Xinhua News Agency earlier said the incident was a hijacking. It did not identify the airline, but said the Urumqi airport has been told not to allow the plane to land. Xinhua says police and emergency vehicles have been rushed to the airport. The region saw the worst ethnic violence in China in decades last month when deadly rioting in Urumqi, Xinjiang's capital, killed 197 people and injured more than 1,700, according to official count.

Opium takes over entire Afghan families, villages

SARAB, Afghanistan (AP)—Open the door to Islam Beg's house and the thick opium smoke rushes out into the cold mountain air, like steam from a bathhouse. It's just past 8 a.m. and the family of six—including a 1-year-old baby boy—is already curled up at the lip of the opium pipe.

Beg, 65, breathes in and exhales a cloud of smoke. He passes the pipe to his wife. She passes it to their daughter. The daughter blows the opium smoke into the baby's tiny mouth. The baby's eyes roll back into his head.

Their faces are gaunt. Their hair is matted. They smell.

In dozens of mountain hamlets in this remote corner of Afghanistan, opium addiction has become so entrenched that whole families—from toddlers to old men—are addicts. The addiction moves from house to house, infecting entire communities cut off from the rest of the world by glacial streams. From just one family years ago, at least half the people of Sarab, population 1,850, are now addicts.

Afghanistan supplies nearly all the world's opium, the raw ingredient used to make heroin, and while most of the deadly crop is exported, enough is left behind to create a vicious cycle of addiction. There are at least 200,000 opium and heroin addicts in Afghanistan—50,000 more than in the much bigger, wealthier U.S., according to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services and a 2005 survey by the U.N. A new survey is expected to show even higher rates of addiction, a window into the human toll of Afghanistan's back-to-back wars and desperate poverty.

Unlike in the West, the close-knit nature of communities here makes addiction a family affair. Instead of passing from one rebellious teenager to another, the habit passes from mother to daughter, father to son. It's turning villages like this one into a landscape of human depredation.

Except for a few soiled mats, Beg's house is bare. He has pawned all his family's belongings to pay for drugs.

"I am ashamed of what I have become," says Beg, an unwashed turban curled on his head. "I've lost my self-respect. I've lost my values. I take the food from this child to pay for my opium," he says, pointing to his 5-year-old grandson, Mamin. "He just stays hungry."

Beg's forefathers owned much of the land in the village, located beside a gushing stream at the end of a canyon of craggy mountains in Badakshan province, hundreds of miles (kilometers) northeast of Kabul, Afghanistan's capital.

He once had 1,200 sheep. He sold them off one by one to pay for drugs.

Vast expanses of Arctic ice melt in summer heat

TUKTOYAKTUK, Northwest Territories (AP)—The Arctic Ocean has given up tens of thousands more square miles (square kilometers) of ice on Sunday in a relentless summer of melt, with scientists watching through satellite eyes for a possible record low polar ice cap.

From the barren Arctic shore of this village in Canada's far northwest, 1,500 miles (2,414 kilometers) north of Seattle, veteran observer Eddie Gruben has seen the summer ice retreating more each decade as the world has warmed. By this weekend the ice edge lay some 80 miles (128 kilometers) at sea.

"Forty years ago, it was 40 miles (64 kilometers) out," said Gruben, 89, patriarch of a local contracting business.

Global average temperatures rose 1 degree Fahrenheit (0.6 degree Celsius) in the past century, but Arctic temperatures rose twice as much or even faster, almost certainly in good part because of manmade greenhouse gases, researchers say.

In late July the mercury soared to almost 86 degrees Fahrenheit (30 degrees Celsus) in this settlement of 900 Inuvialuit, the name for western Arctic Eskimos.

"The water was really warm," Gruben said. "The kids were swimming in the ocean."

As of Thursday, the U.S. National Snow and Ice Data Center reported, the polar ice cap extended over 2.61 million square miles (6.75 million square kilometers) after having shrunk an average 41,000 square miles (106,000 square kilometers) a day in July -- equivalent to one Indiana or three Belgians daily.

The rate of melt was similar to that of July 2007, the year when the ice cap dwindled to a record low minimum extent of 1.7 million square miles (4.3 million square kilometers) in September.

In its latest analysis, the Colorado-based NSIDC said Arctic atmospheric conditions this summer have been similar to those of the summer of 2007, including a high-pressure ridge that produced clear skies and strong melt in the Beaufort Sea, the arm of the Arctic Ocean off northern Alaska and northwestern Canada.

In July, "we saw acceleration in loss of ice," the U.S. center's Walt Meier told The Associated Press. In recent days the pace has slowed, making a record-breaking final minimum "less likely but still possible," he said.

Scientists say the makeup of the frozen polar sea has shifted significantly the past few years, as thick multiyear ice has given way as the Arctic's dominant form to thin ice that comes and goes with each winter and summer.

The past few years have "signaled a fundamental change in the character of the ice and the Arctic climate," Meier said.

Ironically, the summer melts since 2007 appear to have allowed disintegrating but still thick multiyear ice to drift this year into the relatively narrow channels of the Northwest Passage, the east-west water route through Canada's Arctic islands. Usually impassable channels had been relatively ice-free the past two summers.

"We need some warm temperatures with easterly or southeasterly winds to break up and move this ice to the north," Mark Schrader, skipper of the sailboat "Ocean Watch," e-mailed The Associated Press from the west entrance to the passage.

Chavez urges military to be prepared for conflict

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP)—President Hugo Chavez told his military to be prepared for a possible confrontation with Colombia, warning that Bogota's plans to increase the U.S. military presence at its bases poses a threat to Venezuela.

Chavez has issued near daily warnings that Washington could use bases in Colombia to destabilize the region since learning of negotiations to lease seven Colombian military bases to the United States.

"The threat against us is growing," Chavez said Sunday. "I call on the people and the armed forces, let's go, ready for combat!"

The former paratroop commander said Colombian soldiers were recently spotted crossing the porous 1,400-mile (2,300-kilometer) border that separates the two countries and suggested that Colombia may have been trying to provoke Venezuela's military.

"They crossed the Orinoco River in a boat and entered Venezuelan territory," Chavez said. "When our troops arrived, they'd already left."

In Bogota, Colombia's foreign ministry issued a news release denying reports that soldiers crossed into Venezuela, after a revision of troop movements by the Colombian military.

Chavez said Venezuela's foreign ministry would file a formal complaint and warned Colombia that "Venezuela's military will respond if there's an attack against Venezuela."

String of bombings kill at least 40 in Iraq

BAGHDAD (AP)—A double truck bombing tore through a Shiite minority community near the northern city of Mosul, while a series of blasts struck Baghdad Monday in a wave of predawn violence that killed at least 40 people, according to Iraqi officials.

The attacks provided a grim example of U.S. military warnings that insurgents are expected to step up efforts to derail security gains as the Americans scale back their presence.

The deadliest blast on Monday was a double truck bombing in Khazna village, just east of Mosul, as the members of the Shiite Shabak ethnic group who live there were still sleeping.

Two explosives-laden trucks exploded nearly simultaneously and less than 500 yards (meters) apart, killing at least 23 people and wounding 128, according to police and hospital officials.

Those killed were all civilians because the trucks were parked in an alley and were not near a police station.

Nobody claimed responsibility for the attack, but it bore the hallmarks of al-Qaida in Iraq and other Sunni insurgents who remain active in Mosul and surrounding areas.

On Friday, a suicide truck bomber devastated a mosque used by another minority, Shiite Turkomen, killing 44 people north of the city that the U.S. military has dubbed al-Qaida in Iraq's last urban redoubt.

Bombs also continue to strike neighborhoods in Baghdad despite security gains.

The first bomb was hidden in a pile of trash when it exploded about 5:50 a.m. near a group of construction workers drinking tea and looking for day jobs in the religiously mixed neighborhood of Amil, killing at least seven people and wounding 46, officials said.

About 10 minutes later a car bomb targeting construction workers elsewhere in western Baghdad, killing at least 10 people and wounding 35, according to police.

Three bombs also exploded in the mainly Sunni neighborhood of Azamiyah shortly before 7 a.m., wounding a member of a government-backed paramilitary group, an army official said.

The officials spoke on condition of anonymity because they weren't authorized to release the information.

Honduras accepts OAS chief as 'observer'

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP)—Honduras' interim government backed off its refusal of a visit by foreign delegates aimed at resolving the country's political crisis.

The negotiators are welcome as long as Jose Miguel Insulza, head of the Organization of American States, participates only as an "observer," the Foreign Relations Ministry said in a statement Sunday.

The government of interim President Roberto Micheletti has objected to what it calls a "lack of objectivity" by Insulza—a vocal advocate of restoring President Manuel Zelaya to office after he was ousted in a June 28 coup.

The ministry said the visit—originally planned for Tuesday—will now be rescheduled for a date "that will be decided in the next two days."

The statement by the Foreign Relations Ministry came just hours after the government had postponed the visit, objecting to the inclusion of Insulza in the group.

The delegation organized by the OAS also includes the foreign ministers of Argentina, Canada, Costa Rica, Jamaica, Mexico and the Dominican Republic.

It was not the first time that diplomatic efforts to resolve the coup appear to have been delayed or drawn out by the interim government. It has dalled over a proposed compromise plan presented by Costa Rican President Oscar Arias, who served as mediator in the dispute, while rejecting the main point, Zelaya's reinstatement in office.

The Washington-based OAS, a long-established hemispheric body promoting democracy, development and legal cooperation in the Americas, named the delegation on Friday.

Iran judiciary looks to calm prison abuse outrage

TEHRAN, Iran (AP)—Police and judiciary officials sought on Sunday to calm public outrage in Iran over the deaths of detained protesters in prison, acknowledging abuses and calling for those responsible to be punished. A senior commander of the powerful Revolutionary Guard, which led the crackdown against the protesters, meanwhile, said that the three top opposition figures are the ones who should be put on trial, striking a harder line that suggests tensions at the highest levels of Iran's power structure. Iran's Prosecutor General Ghorban Ali Dorri Najafabadi called for those responsible for mistreating detainees to be punished, saying that the protesters weren't even meant to be taken to Kahrizak prison, which has been at the center of abuse claims.

Homeless Holocaust survivor leaves $100,000 gift

JERUSALEM (AP)—Hebrew University has received a surprise donation of more than $100,000 from an unexpected benefactor—a woman who survived the Nazi Holocaust and appeared to be destitute, a university official said Sunday. Upon her death two years ago, a homeless Holocaust survivor living on the streets of New York City willed the gift to the university. The Jewish woman lived out of a shopping cart in Manhattan and had no known relatives, said Yefet Ozery, Hebrew University's director of development and public relations. "She lived as a very poor woman. And when she died at the age of 92, it was discovered she had accumulated close to $300,000," Ozery said.

Clinton presses Angola to sweeten trade ties

LUANDA, Angola (AP)—U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton, bringing her democracy and development tour of Africa to oil-rich Angola on Sunday, encouraged the war-ravaged country to continue reforms and pledged to boost trade ties with a major energy producer. Clinton, on the third leg of a seven-nation trip, came to the Angolan capital to reinforce America's presence in a country where it increasingly is competing for resources with China. Beijing has loaned Angola billions of dollars in recent years without pressing reform. After meeting Foreign Minister Assuncao Afonso dos Anjos, Clinton urged the government to build on successful legislative elections held in 2008—the first in 16 years—through presidential elections and dealing with the legacy of its 27-year civil war.

2010 Buick LaCrosse CXS is an American Lexus

The thoughtfully designed 2010 Buick LaCrosse CXS is as good as or better than the Lexus ES350 in every way.

LOS ANGELES TIMES

By DAN NEIL
(C) 2009, LOS ANGELES TIMES

Fighter pilots call it “target fixation” when you become so focused on a single adversary that you lose situational awareness and fly into something large and obvious, like the ground. Buick’s 2010 LaCrosse—a near-luxury, mid-size-to-large sedan—was built to put the cross-hairs on a single bogie, the Lexus ES350, and I’ll tell you right now, it blows the Lexus out of the sky. Pow. Parachute. Smoking crater.

Oh, you can quibble over one detail or another. The LaCrosse’s roof A-pillars are huge and make it hard to look through a corner on a tight, two-lane road (it’s also possible to lose sight of pedestrians in crosswalks). There are moments that the cabin, with its Aqua Velva-blue ambient lighting, thick chrome instrument bezels, luminous LCD screens and spread of glowing buttons, looks like the flight deck of some drug-addled dirigible.

But no fair appraisal of this car can conclude anything but that the Buick is as good as or better than the Lexus in every way: It’s as dead quiet, as thoughtfully designed, as this-minute in its technology. My top-of-the-line CXS had a 3.6-liter direct-injection V-6 under the scalloped hood, a six-speed Aisin automatic transmission, continuously variable suspension damping with Sport mode, Harman/Kardon sound system, touch-screen navigation and adaptive headlamps. Out the door at $39,195.

And yet with all of the semiconductor circuitry, servos, gadgets and displays, the LaCrosse feels deeply, foundationally sound. All is hushed and serene. Everything is damped. The whole car feels packed in ermine. It is an American Lexus.

But is that enough? In other words, has bench-marking the ES350—Lexus’ best-selling sedan, by the way—left the LaCrosse blind to challenges from other competitors in this segment? After all, the ES350 is a tarted-up Toyota Camry and enjoys its place in the market primarily because of the aspirational updraft of the Lexus brand. Personally, the ES350 bores me like nothing since “The Fountainhead.”

How does the Buick stack up against, say, the Hyundai Genesis or the Infiniti G37 sedan, both finely tailored, tech-sodden sedans with rear-wheel drive?

with “Matlock”-watching crapulence (the average age of a Buick buyer is 68); the parent company, GM, is feeling the unaccustomed disdain of Red State America on account of the Obama administration’s $83.5 billion have to come equipped with naked wood nymphs to placate these dissidents.

Time for some shopkeeping: The base LaCrosse ($27,835, delivered) is powered by a 3.0-liter direct-injection V-6 good for 255 hp. The up-level trim package is the CXL ($30,395). Add all-wheel drive (with brake-based limited-slip differential) and the price goes to $32,600. The top-shelf model is the CXS ($33,765), with a 3.6-liter V-6 putting out 280 hp. The Touring Package adds 19-inch wheels and variable-damping suspension and Sport mode, with electronics that put a sharper edge on the transmission, steering, throttle and suspension responses.

Daringly, Buick will offer a 2.4-liter four-cylinder (172 hp/182 pound-feet of torque) in the LaCrosse this fall. That will be just about when gas prices will spike again, I predict.

Some people have wondered why GM kept the Buick division and shed Saturn, which has the freshest and most fuel-efficient product lineup. The answer: China. Buick is a prestigious luxury brand there, and in fact, the new LaCrosse was a joint effort between GM’s American and Chinese design studios. The Chinese contingent was responsible for the LaCrosse’s insanely fussed-over interior. Example: The dash material is synthetic leather, but it’s French stitched with real thread.

No corners are gracelessly cut here—no ugly cover plates, no exposed fastener buttons and the barest minimum of seams. The whole transverse sweep of the cabin, the two-tone materials bisected by a lyric bow of ambient lighting and wood grain that plays into the doors, looks great, especially at night.

GM execs claim the cabin reflects “feng shui” design principles in its sculpted and harmonious form language, although I might have expected a red door somewhere. In any event, the interior is excellent. I parked the LaCrosse next to a new Lexus to compare, and it wasn’t even close.

Style aside, the biggest marker of Chinese influence is the car’s enormous back seat. According to GM, about 25 percent of Chinese buyers—entrepreneurs and corrupt bureaucrats—will be chauffeured. If legroom is high on cross-shoppers’ list, the LaCrosse will score a clean kill.

Complaints, I had a few. The exterior styling is really strong—masculine, well planted, with a lovely roof arch—in every direction but the front. I can’t quite fathom the headlight design, which looks like Dame Edna’s spectacles, and the odd chamfering of the hood, a design detail that doesn’t seem to go anywhere.

And the car is about 250 pounds heavier than it ought to be, a fact that robs the LaCrosse of some much-needed verve and agility.

The CXS gets off the mark smoothly, and it hits 60 mph in about 7.5 seconds—reasonably quick—but the extra weight doesn’t help it in corners, and there is the inevitable tendency of a front-drive car to overwhelm the tires and understeer.

I look forward to trying the all-wheel-drive model. To say the LaCrosse handles better than the ES350 is the damndest of faint praise.

The weight is telling because weight is the most expensive thing to get out of a car. I read the poundage as an artifact of the pre-bankruptcy GM—indeed, a metaphor of the company before bankruptcy’s radical dieting.

Still, the LaCrosse is the car that most thought couldn’t be built by Buick. It’s actually desirable. On the long road to recovery, it’s a good start.

LOS ANGELES TIMES

The 2010 Buick LaCrosse CXS, with its ambient lighting, the virtually seamless interior looks great, especially at night.

What about the brilliantly executed Acura TL, with its torque-vectoring all-wheel drive? The competition among near-luxury, mid-size sedans makes a Cuban cockfight look tame.

Born in a blizzard of pink slips and a tsunami of tears, the Buick LaCrosse—the first new car launched by GM since it emerged from bankruptcy—has to be more than on par with some middling Lexus. It has to be fantastic.

This is a brand in a hole the size of AIG’s. Not only is Buick synonymous auto-industry bailout.

I have not gotten a single e-mail from anyone saying, “You know, I love and support my country, so I’m going to buy a GM car.” But I’ve gotten maybe 100 e-mails that say, in effect, “I’ll never buy a GM car until the government gets out of the car business.”

Is the LaCrosse enough of a car for them to hold their noses past the stink of bankruptcy and the reek of government ownership? It’s a pretty great car, but honestly, I think the LaCrosse would Recession Road is part of a summer-long quest to find the stories of lives altered by a flattened economy. Reporter Theresa Vargas and photographer Michael Williamson left Washington on June 1 to cross the country and post an online journal of the characters and scenes they encounter. Here's a recent post from the blog, and some of Williamson's most touching images. You can find others at voices.washingtonpost.com/recession-road.

It hit us the other day. In all the miles we have traveled, no one has refused to talk to us. Not a single person has asked me to put away the notebook or raised a hand to block Michael's camera.

This surprises us.

We've been journalists for years, he three times longer than me, and we've had doors slammed in our faces and been called names for the simple fact that we showed up at a time when a person wanted nothing less than to talk to the media.

THE WASHINGTON POST

In Caryville, Tenn., Charlie Carroll, 63, has been unable to find steady work. "I'll do anything," he says. "I'll mow your lawn. I'll detail your car. I just want to work." With him is Linda Proffitt, whose boyfriend has put in 23 job applications with no response.

ing less than to talk to the media.

We expected to encounter a bit of hostility on this trip. In a few rare cases, we've even had escape plans. They always end the same: If we get separated, meet at the car. After all, we are stepping into unfamiliar places and asking people questions even their friends don't broach. How much do you make? How do you use the restroom in a place with no running water? Do your children look at you differently now?

But from homeless camps to upscale neighborhoods, there have been few pauses, few hesitations before the answers came spilling out. It's as if the recession has changed what is acceptable to talk about. As if now that there is something bigger than all of us to blame, we can show our wounds.

It has probably helped that Michael and I have shown a few of our own along the way. How could we not? How could we listen to people talk Ed Dale, an unemployed welder, reads letters inside his self-made home in a tent city in Nashville where other homeless people have also settled. His protection is plastic sheeting discarded from a nearby billboard when its advertisement changed. "I'm just trying to make the best of a bad situation," he says.

all day long about hardship and not be reminded of our own brushes with it?

"I can describe four types of trailers because I know what it's like to live in them,"

Michael said one day.

He also knows what it's like to sneak cans of tuna because he was hungry and to be served sugar sandwiches, which are exactly as they sound, sugar between two pieces of bread. I used to eat chip sandwiches—again, made exactly as you'd expect.

Still, we are well aware of the differences between our stories and the ones we're hearing now—we had no way of knowing what we didn't have until we had it. The people we are meeting across America knew they had something, often had worked hard their whole lives to get it, only to lose it in the past year or so.

Their wounds are still painfully fresh. The fact that so many are willing to show them to us, knowing we will post them here for thousands to see, must say something about this recession.

Las Vegas continues to attract new visitors, this one eager to see the sights before the car was even parked.

Mary Franklin breaks into a dance step while performing with peers at a senior citizen center in the Watts section of Los Angeles.

Old-timers turn into sharp rhymers

By JULIETTE FUNES
(C) 2009, LOS ANGELES TIMES

LOS ANGELES—No one can rock it on the mike like Patsy Cole, also known as Lady P, a 48-year-old rapper and grandmother of 28, with two more on the way. She hustles, flows, rhymes and raps, all with the intention of conveying an important message to kids and teens: If the youngsters can do it, so can she.

Two summers ago, Cole began attending a class developed by hip-hop artist Keith Cross called the "Senior Citizen Rap Class," a monthlong community project in Los Angeles' Watts neighborhood that attempts to bridge the gap between young and old through a shared love of music.

"The first day was awesome," she said. "I wrote my first rap, and I thought, 'I did that.'" She has since formed a gospel rap group to positively influence the young people in her life.

"Sometimes when we're young we have dreams and don't get to pursue them. We let them go," she said. "But it's never too late, no matter your age, to pursue your dreams."

About 40 family members and friends gathered recently at the Watts Senior Community Center to watch the rappers perform their original pieces at the conclusion of this summer's class.

Cole was joined by Aline Murphy, 73; Sarah "Sneedy Weedy" Sneed, 75; Charles "Gentle Ben" Herbert, 50; and Mary Franklin, whose age remained a mystery as she brought the audience to its feet with her freestyle dancing and upbeat rapping.

Murphy, Cole's mother, thought she was too old to be in the class and initially couldn't stand rap, but she has been attending the event since its inception in 2004. A blues and R&B singer originally from Memphis, Tenn., Murphy was enthusiastic to be on the stage.

"It was great," she said afterward. "I've always sang, but not rap. It's a great experience to be able to get through to the kids."

The program targets senior citizens who have little tolerance for the music their grandchildren listen to daily.

"I think they're the furthest removed from rap music," Cross said. "There's not a knowledge passed on from old to young, and that's because we're pointed in two different directions. Teaching them how to rap would be perfect."

Through an Artist in Resident grant from the Los Angeles City Department of Cultural Affairs, which enables a local artist to implement a cultural program in a community that doesn't traditionally focus on the arts, Cross has been able to teach the class every summer.

However, it isn't easy to get seniors into a class that focuses on rap, mainly because of what it's associated with—gangs, drugs, violence and the exploitation of women.

"A lot of seniors now are turned off by a lot of the negativity you hear in rap music," Cross said. "What they hear now is disrespectful rap music on the radio. They have a misconception that all rap is bad."

Cross instead uses music like blues and soul to compare their lyrical and musical elements to that of hip-hop.

"Music is something we all have in common ... and is something we can all get together around if it's presented right," Cross said. Learning how to analyze music also encourages them to find other musical influences for their children and grandchildren, Cross said.

"There is positive rap out there; we just have to look for it," he said.

Cross understands the older generation's dislike for contemporary rap. His rap music used to be graphic, but that changed when he became a substitute teacher and saw the influence hip-hop music had on his students.

'G.I. Joe' commands box office with $56.2M debut

LOS ANGELES (AP)—G.I. Joe is the latest toy to invade Hollywood and plant its blockbuster flag.

Inspired by the Hasbro action figure, Paramount's "G.I. Joe: The Rise of Cobra" took command of the weekend box office with a $56.2 million debut domestically, according to studio estimates Sunday. "G.I. Joe" also took in $44.3 million overseas for a worldwide total of $100.5 million.

Meryl Streep's Julia Child tale "Julie & Julia" opened a solid No. 2 as an alternative for adult crowds with $20.1 million. While "G.I. Joe" was the first choice for young males, women 35 and older were the main audience for "Julie & Julia."

"G.I. Joe" follows Paramount's "Transformers" franchise as the latest toy story to

1. "G.I. Joe: The Rise of Cobra," $56.2 million.
2. "Julie & Julia," $20.1 million.
3. "G-Force," $9.8 million.
4. "Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince," $8.9 million.
5. "Funny People," $7.9 million.
6. "The Ugly Truth," $7 million.
7. "A Perfect Getaway," $5.8 million.
8. "Aliens in the Attic," $4 million.
9. "Orphan," $3.73 million.
10. "500 Days of Summer," $3.7 million.

find success on the big screen.

Harsh reviews for "Transformers: Revenge of the Fallen" earlier this summer prompted Paramount to skip critic screenings for "G.I. Joe" and put the movie in theaters sight-unseen by most reviewers.

Critics generally trashed the "Transformers" sequel, yet it had a colossal opening and is on its way to joining the handful of movies to top $400 million domestically. Based on that disparity between critical and commercial reaction, the studio decided it could do without reviews for "G.I. Joe."

"The thing we saw from 'Transformers' is that with these kind of movies, at times critics have a hard time getting their arms around them," said Rob Moore, Paramount vice chairman. "But the audience got exactly what it was. A fun summer movie, a great way to end your summer. You just relax and have a good time. You don't have to worry about global politics or global warming."

Critics who went to see "G.I. Joe" after it opened gave it mixed reviews at best, with many branding it mindless action but some finding it fun and entertaining.

The weekend's other new wide release, Universal's slasher thriller "A Perfect Getaway" with Steve Zahn and Milla Jovovich, opened weakly at No. 7 with $5.8 million.

The previous weekend's top movie, Adam Sandler and Seth Rogen's "Funny People," tumbled to No. 5 with $7.9 million, down a whopping 65 percent from its opening weekend. The Universal release has taken in $40.4 million so far.

"G.I. Joe" pulled Hollywood out of a monthlong box-office swoon compared with last summer. The overall box office came in at $147 million, up 22 percent from the same weekend a year ago, when the Batman blockbuster "The Dark Knight" still was the No. 1 flick after four weeks in release.

"Joe" kind of saved the day," said Paul Dergarabedian, box-office analyst for Hollywood.com. "We needed a box-office hero to turn things around, and we certainly got it."

But summer revenues continue to lag behind last year's, with receipts this season down about 1 percent.

"G.I. Joe" features Dennis Quaid, Channing Tatum, Sienna Miller, Marlon Wayans and Joseph Gordon-Levitt in a globe-trotting adventure about an elite military unit taking on a corrupt arms dealer.

While the G.I. Joe action figures started out as all-American heroes, the movie expands their story to include an international team of good guys to capitalize on overseas box office, which nowadays can equal or exceed domestic receipts for Hollywood movies.

"One of the best markets on the movie was Russia," Moore said. "How far G.I. Joe has come. He was incredibly popular in Russia."

"Julie & Julia" casts Streep as celebrated chef Child and Amy Adams as a woman trying to revitalize her own life by cooking every recipe in Child's "Mastering the Art of French Cooking."

Sony opened it opposite "G.I. Joe" to give adults a fresh option after a summer of action adventures, family flicks and comedies.

"We felt the audience we were going to start with was going to be very hungry by this point," said Rory Bruer, Sony's head of distribution. "It's a really fun movie with heart and humor and good food."

Child was also a hit on Amazon.com this weekend. "Mastering the Art of French Cooking" was the Web site's top seller Sunday, while Child's memoir "My Life in France" was No. 9.

Estimated ticket sales for Friday through Sunday at U.S. and Canadian theaters, according to Hollywood.com. Final figures will be released Monday.

Japanese actress arrested in Tokyo

TOKYO (AP)—Actress Noriko Sakai has been arrested on drug charges, police said Sunday, after she turned herself in following a week of frenzied media speculation about her lifestyle and whereabouts.

The 38-year-old celebrity had been missing since her husband was arrested last Monday for alleged drug possession, and she later became a suspect herself.

Speculation about her actions and location has dominated headlines in recent days in Japan, where even light infractions that would be shrugged off by celebrities elsewhere can ruin careers.

The singer and actress was arrested after she appeared at a police facility in Tokyo on Saturday night, a police spokesman said. He declined to give his full name, citing department policy. He said she was arrested in connection with an anti-stimulant law, but it was not clear if she had been charged.

Sakai debuted on a video at the age of 15 in 1986, but rose to fame through acting in TV dramas and singing in the 1990s. She recently became a mother and revived her career by appealing to older female fans. Sakai is popular in China, Hong Kong and Taiwan and is well known across Asia—an unusual achievement for a Japanese actress.

She had a number of large advertisement deals, including with giant carmaker Toyota, when the scandal unfolded. Broadcaster NHK reported Sunday that Toyota and other advertisers were pulling her TV commercials and canceling contracts. Calls to Toyota's public relations department Sunday in Tokyo went unanswered.

The president of Sun Music Production, the talent company that manages Sakai, apologized for the affair late Saturday.

Masahisa Aizawa told reporters in Tokyo that Sakai had looked thinner than usual when he last saw her in mid-July and that he told her at the time to make sure she was eating enough.

She should "tell everything, without covering anything up," Aizawa said. "I want her to get a fresh start on life."

Miley Cyrus, 'Twilight' sweep Teen Choice Awards

UNIVERSAL CITY, Calif. (AP)—Miley Cyrus rode a wave at the Teen Choice Awards.

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN
FROM UNIVERSAL PRESS SYNDICATE

DEAR ABBY: My 18-year-old sister, "Cheryl," left home abruptly a week ago. She suddenly stopped taking all her medications, shut off her cell phone and left town with her underage boyfriend. She is a delightful person who also happens to be diabetic, asthmatic and bipolar. Mom received one phone call (from a landline) mentioning that she "might" be heading toward the East Coast.

Dear Abby

I consider my sister dangerous to herself and others because she has a history of reckless violence when she's off her meds. My question is, how can you find someone who doesn't want to be found when they NEED to be found?

HEARTBROKEN SISTER IN INDIANA

DEAR SISTER: If you think YOU are worried, what about the parents of the underage boy? Your next step should be to contact them and also your mother, so that all of you can notify the police and report them missing. And when you do, be sure to inform them that your sister has several conditions that require medications, that she's off all of them and could be a danger to herself and the young man. Then cross your fingers.

■ ■ ■

DEAR ABBY: I have recently met a woman I really connect with, but I have a problem with settling down. I have always had difficulty restricting myself to one person when I'm seriously dating. I want to change so my lifestyle won't come back and bite me in the butt—but I'm not sure what to do.

What I'm asking is, what do you suggest for someone like me to get comfortable with the idea of settling down so that I won't be destined for failure?

UNSURE IN RICHMOND, VA.

DEAR UNSURE: Slow down. You may have been dating the wrong women. When two people are truly compatible, there is less temptation to look for other company. Take things slowly and get to know the lady you're currently dating. If she qualifies in all the areas you think are important and you still find yourself looking around for something in addition, then you may have a problem and should talk to a therapist because no one woman can ever completely satisfy a man who craves variety.

■ ■ ■

DEAR ABBY: My father, who is in bad health, recently announced that he would like to be cremated and buried at the foot of my mother's grave. My birth mother died 28 years ago when I was 2, after they had been married only three years.

Dad married my stepmother when I was 8. I feel he should be buried with the wife he's been with for 22 years. She is the one who has seen him through the worst times in his life, his heart attack and stroke. My stepmother seems to have no negative feelings about it.

Am I wrong for thinking that a husband and wife should lie side-by-side when their time comes—with a single headstone with their names and dates of birth/death/marriage? Or is there some tradition I don't know about that he should be buried with his first wife?

ENQUIRING IN CLARKSTON, WASH.

DEAR ENQUIRING: Your stepmother is realistic and unsentimental. She knows your father was married before, and they may have discussed this between the two of them. Perhaps she feels that because your father prefers to be interred with your mother, that's where he belongs. Your stepmother had him during the most important years—while he was living and breathing. And who knows? She may marry again, so think positively.

Taiwan's Chou cast as Kato in 'Green Hornet'

HONG KONG (AP)—Taiwanese R&B sensation Jay Chou will make his Hollywood debut playing Kato in the Columbia Pictures adaptation of "The Green Hornet," replacing Hong Kong comedian Stephen Chow.

Columbia Pictures announced the casting decision in a statement early Saturday.

Chou had originally signed on to direct the film and play Kato—the sidekick character portrayed by Bruce Lee in the 1960s TV series—but dropped out over the past year, saying he wanted to focus on developing a superhero movie with Jack Black.

"Eternal Sunshine of the Spotless Mind" director Michel Gondry replaced Chou as director.

Gondry said Chou impressed him during auditions by getting along well with Canadian actor Seth Rogen, who will play the title character.

"Jay is incredibly unique and charming and fights like a wild dog! When I filmed him next to Seth, they had such great chemistry," the French director was quoted as saying in the Columbia Pictures statement.

Chou said he was a bit intimidated by following in Bruce Lee's footsteps but said: "I won't try to be Bruce Lee's Kato. I will try to bring my own interpretation to the part."

The Green Hornet characters

debuted in a radio series in 1936 on WXYZ Detroit and starred in several comic books. In 1966, they inspired an ABC-TV series starring Van Williams as the title character and Lee as Kato. It ran for one season.

Nicolas Cage and Cameron Diaz are also in talks to star in the Columbia Pictures adaptation, scheduled to be released in the summer of 2010, a studio spokesman said earlier.

Known for his slurred delivery of soulful ballads and upbeat R&B numbers, the 30-year-old Chou started his career as a songwriter but quickly became a huge pop sensation after releasing his debut album in 2000.

ENTERTAINMENT TIDBITS

Sting calls on Iran to release political prisoners

WASHINGTON (AP)—Sting is calling for the release of political prisoners in Iran and lashing out against the country's human rights violations. In a statement, the British rock star specifically called on Iran to release prominent Iranian-American academic Kian Tajbakhsh. Iranian authorities arrested Tajbakhsh for the second time in recent years last month amid a crackdown following disputed June 12 presidential elections. In a statement posted on a Web site promoting Tajbakhsh's release, Sting urged Iranians to speak out against the government's "system of political repression and human rights violation." Tajbakhsh is currently on trial, accused of fomenting unrest following the elections. Family and supporters deny the charges and have accused the Iranian government of staging a show trial. In 2007, Tajbakhsh, a social scientist and urban planner, spent four months in prison on charges of endangering national security. He denied the allegations.

Venice Film Fest introduces 3D film award

ROME (AP)—The storied Venice Film Festival is updating its awards lineup by offering a prize for the best 3D movie of the year. Organizers said in a statement Saturday that nine films will compete for the new award at the festival's 66th edition on Sept. 2-12. The movies include blockbusters "Ice Age: Dawn of the Dinosaurs," "Monsters vs. Aliens" and "Up." Organizers last week announced that 23 films would be vying for the festival's top award, the Golden Lion. The entries are all world premieres and include Michael Moore's documentary on the financial crisis, called "Capitalism: A Love Story," and former Gucci designer Tom Ford's directorial debut, "A Single Man," starring Colin Firth and Julianne Moore.

Gary Sinise headlines free concert in Denver park

DENVER (AP)—"CSI: New York" star Gary Sinise is headlining a free concert aimed at bringing attention to renovation efforts at Denver's Civic Center Park. Sinise says the recent renovation of Millennium Park in Chicago, where he is from, inspired him to want to play the concert Saturday for the nonprofit Civic Center Conservancy. "When they asked me to be a part of this, I jumped on it," Sinise said. Local band Opie Gone Bad opens for Sinise's Lt. Dan Band, named after the character in the movie "Forrest Gump" that earned him an Academy Award nomination for best supporting actor. Conservancy officials say the concert's goal is to make people aware of restoration and renovation efforts planned for the nearly 100-year-old park.

Tiger rallies to win at Firestone

AKRON, Ohio (AP)—The battle was everything Tiger Woods expected. The finish was nothing anyone imagined, except for Woods hoisting another World Golf Championship trophy at Firestone.

Woods was in trouble in the trees on the famous par-5 16th hole, one shot behind Pádraig Harrington, trying to figure out how he could squeeze out a victory Sunday in the Bridgestone Invitational.

He delivered another signature moment, this one an 8-iron from 178 that wound up a foot from the hole for birdie. Moments later, with an official timing his every shot, Pádraig Harrington rushed his way into a stunning meltdown. He hit five straight shots without losing his turn, made triple bogey and became a mere bystander the final two holes as Woods won for the 70th time in his career.

Woods closed with a 5-under 65, becoming the first player in PGA Tour history to win seven times on the same golf course and giving him back-to-back victories going into the PGA Championship, his last chance to win a major this year.

Woods won it with an 8-iron that was pure theater.

"When I hit it, I knew it was going to be a good one," he said. "I thought it was going to be just a little bit past the hole. I was surprised it spun that much considering it was that much downwind. But it came back and ended up a kick-in."

He believes Harrington lost it with a stopwatch that was unnecessary.

They were timed earlier in the round, then told by John Paramor, the PGA European Tour's chief referee, they were on the clock on the 16th tee, with Harrington in the lead by one shot. Knowing he had no time to contemplate his escape from the trees, the collar of a bunker and a dicey flop shot behind the green, he turned the hole known as "The Monster" into an utter mess.

The pivotal play was his fourth shot behind the green, which came out hot and into the water.

"I had an awkward fourth shot," Harrington said. "I had to go after it and probably rushed that a bit. That was the end of that."

Harrington told Woods when it was over, "We'll do battle many times again."

Woods, who holds the three-time major champion in high esteem, looked forward to that.

"Like I was telling him out there, 'I'm sorry that John got in the way of a great battle,' because it was such a great battle for 16 holes," Woods said. "We're going at it, head-to-head, and unfortunately that happened. Paddy and I will definitely do it again."

Asked if he won because of an 8-iron or a stopwatch, Woods replied, "Both."

Paramor said the final pairing was 17 minutes behind schedule on the 16th hole and "we had no choice but to put them on the clock."

The dispute clouded an otherwise remarkable rally for Woods, who won his 16th title in just 30 starts in the World Golf Championships series, and picked up a lot of momentum headed to Hazeltine.

Woods, who has won the Bridgestone Invitational seven times in 10 starts and has never finished out of the top five, closed out his remarkable afternoon in style with a 6-foot birdie putt.

Tiger Woods poses with the trophy after winning the Bridgestone Invitational golf tournament Sunday, Aug. 9, 2009, at Firestone Country Club in Akron, Ohio.

His fifth victory this year and 70th of his PGA Tour career put him three behind Jack Nicklaus, and 12 victories away from the all-time record held by Sam Snead.

"We locked horns pretty good," Woods said. "I made a couple of mistakes. Paddy was being consistent, grinding it out, doing all the right things. Unfortunately, 16 happened. But it was a great battle all day."

It was every bit of that.

Woods won for only the sixth time in his career when trailing by three shots or more, a deficit that didn't last long.

He hit his approach into the par-5 second hole just over the bunkers to 25 feet to make eagle, and two more birdies was enough for him to take the lead after only five holes. From the right rough on the ninth fairway—a rare miss on the front nine—Woods hit to 7 feet for a birdie that gave him a 30 on the outward nine and a two-shot lead.

Harrington, a three-time major champion with a tough mind, kept grinding away with pars and regained a share of the lead with his first birdie of the day on the 11th. And when Woods made consecutive bogeys, Harrington found himself with a one-shot lead heading for the homestretch.

What cost Harrington was his second shot from the trees, which he tried to land some 80 yards short of the green. Instead, he pulled the 5-iron to the grassy slope of the bunker, and had to decide quickly his next move after watching Woods stuff the 8-iron.

"It was a superb golf shot. It was a phenomenal shot," Harrington said. "I struggled to hit that green with a lob wedge, so it was pretty impressive. But I was having my own troubles at that stage."

From behind the green, the shot is all down hill toward the water. Harrington could have played sideways and assured himself of a bogey, but he figured a par was his chance to win the tournament.

"I just got it a little bit too much on the club face and didn't get under it enough, and it came out too strong," he said.

The four-shot swing was the tournament. For the first time all day, Woods finally felt in control.

Ultimately, the winner didn't surprise anyone.

Hunter Mahan, who shot 66 and tied for fourth, looked up at the leaderboard early in his round and saw that Woods already had erased a three-shot deficit after four holes.

"That's what he does," Mahan said. "He could play this course left-handed and do well."

A short time later, Camilo Villegas left the clubhouse and passed by the British-based Sky Sports broadcast crew watching on TV. Woods and Harrington were on the 12th hole.

"What are you watching for? You know what's going to happen," Villegas said with a smile.

The final hour was full of surprises, except for Woods winning at Firestone.

AP source: Timberwolves, Rambis reach coaching deal

MINNEAPOLIS (AP)—Long considered the heir apparent to Phil Jackson in sunny Los Angeles, Lakers assistant Kurt Rambis is taking a much different, and colder, route to a head coaching job.

Rambis and the Minnesota Timberwolves have an oral agreement and are completing details of the contract, which is expected to be announced early this week, according to a person with knowledge of the negotiations. The person spoke to The Associated Press on the condition of anonymity Sunday because an announcement has not been made.

Timberwolves president David Kahn said in a text message he met with Rambis' agent Sunday but has yet to conclude the deal.

The selection ends a seven-week search after Kahn decided in June not to keep Kevin McHale. Rambis was one of three finalists, with TV commentator and former NBA star Mark Jackson and Houston assistant Elston Turner.

The 51-year-old Rambis has the most head coaching experience of the group. He has been a Lakers assistant for 10 years, was their head coach in the lockout shortened 1998-99 season and has filled in on several occasions for his Hall of Fame coach.

Rambis won four titles with the Lakers as a player and three more as an assistant. He comes to a franchise that

Griffin, Hansbrough resting summer injuries

GREENBURGH, N.Y. (AP)—Blake Griffin grabbed a microphone for a little practice working in TV. Tyler Hansbrough pulled up a chair and watched one.

There's not much else for the two rookies to do until they can get back on the court.

Griffin and Hansbrough are injured, sending the All-Americans to the sidelines and away from basketball activities after promising starts to their pro careers during summer league play.

They were in New York on Sunday along with their classmates for the rookie photo shoot, where the NBA's first-year players were photographed by Panini in the poses that will appear on their trading cards.

But while many players shot around during breaks at the Madison Square Garden training facility, Griffin and Hansbrough had to find other ways to keep themselves busy.

Griffin should be back soon. The No. 1 overall pick was told late last month to rest his strained right shoulder for three to four weeks, and neither Griffin nor the Los Angeles Clippers believe the injury will cause any long-term problems.

"It's one of those deals where it's not like a serious injury, but it needed rest to get back to 100 percent," Griffin said. "They just didn't want me to go start playing again and do something to risk it further."

Hansbrough's injury is more severe. He was wearing a large black walking boot to protect a right shin injury that could keep the Indiana Pacers' top pick out through the start of training camp. The team said on July 31 he would be out for up to two months, though Hansbrough wasn't sure what his timetable was.

The Pacers said Hansbrough was hurt last season while leading North Carolina to the NCAA championship, though he played well while appearing in all five games of the Orlando summer league.

"I felt good about it," he said. "For me it was just an opportunity to learn some of the offenses, some of the things that we like to do and run, and it kind of gave me a chance to learn some stuff besides just trying to cram it before the season."

Hansbrough didn't seem particularly concerned while discussing his health as he watched NASCAR coverage, having become a bigger fan after taking part in the festivities at the Allstate 400 at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway last month.

team next season, with star forward Al Jefferson coming back from a torn knee ligament.

In his first summer on the job, Kahn has made three trades already and expects to make more before the season. Right now, the player with the longest tenure is Corey Brewer, who was drafted in 2007.

Kahn was hired to run the basketball side of the Timberwolves franchise in May and spent the next three weeks or so meeting with McHale before announcing on June 17 he would hire someone else.

He interviewed more than a dozen candidates and cut the field to three two weeks ago. Rambis flew to the Twin Cities on Wednesday night to meet owner Glen Taylor.

Rambis, a Californian who spent most of his 14-year playing career with the Lakers, interviewed for jobs in Sacramento and Philadelphia this offseason. He couldn't work out a deal with the Kings, and the 76ers went with Eddie Jordan.

Rambis should add some grit to the Wolves. That was his specialty as a player, when the bespectacled, wild-haired hustler would ignite fans at the old Forum by diving for loose balls, throwing an elbow or two to get position in the post and grabbing rebounds to start the famed Showtime fast break.

In a curious twist, Rambis feuded with McHale when the latter played for the Boston Celtics in the 1980s. McHale's clothesline of Rambis in the 1984 NBA finals is an enduring image from one of basketball's great rivalries.

Rambis' standing was no doubt bolstered by his ties to Phil Jackson, who has won more NBA titles than any other coach. Rambis was the team's top defensive strategist during last season's run to the title and was able to watch how Jackson handled players and media.

Jackson turns 64 next month and has gotten a clean bill of health. Last season, he was troubled by pain and swelling in his lower legs. He has had two hip replacements since 2006 and uses a cane at times. He also had an angioplasty in 2003.

Damon, Teixeira power Yanks to win over Bosox

NEW YORK (AP)—Johnny Damon and Mark Teixeira hit back-to-back homers in the eighth inning Sunday night, and the New York Yankees beat the Boston Red Sox 5-2 to finish their first four-game home sweep of their bitter rival in 24 years.

Victor Martinez hit a two-run homer off Phil Coke (4-3) in the top of the eighth, snapping Boston's 31-inning scoreless streak and making it 2-1.

Daniel Bard (0-1) retired the first two hitters in the bottom half before Damon drove a 98-mph fastball over the right-field fence, bringing the fourth consecutive sellout crowd at Yankee Stadium to its feet.

The fans didn't have a chance to sit down, either, before Teixeira went deep to right two pitches later and untied it with his league-leading 29th homer.

Nick Swisher added a two-run single off Hideki Okajima later in the inning, which made it an easy night for Mariano Rivera. The All-Star closer earned his major league-leading 32nd save.

Tigers 8, Twins 7

At Detroit, Placido Polanco hit a go-ahead single in the eighth inning, helping Detroit beat Minnesota.

The AL Central-leading Tigers have won five of seven games to keep their lead over the Chicago White Sox and third-place Twins. Minnesota has lost seven of nine and trails the Tigers by 5 1/2 games.

Brandon Lyon (5-4) pitched a scoreless eighth and Fernando Rodney closed the game for his 23rd save in 24 chances.

Matt Guerrier (5-1) gave up a lead-off double in the eighth. Minnesota manager Ron Gardenhire then chose to walk free-swinging Curtis Granderson to face a contact hitter in the hopes of getting a double play, and Polanco made him pay for the decision with a bloop single to right to put Detroit ahead 7-6.

Rangers 7, Angels 0

At Anaheim, Calif., rookie Derek Holland threw a three-hitter against the majors' highest-scoring offense for his first career shutout, and Texas gained ground on the AL West-leading Angels.

The 22-year-old Holland didn't allow a hit until the sixth inning of his 12th career start as Texas took two of three from the Angels in their weekend series, cutting Los Angeles' lead in the AL West to 3 1/2 games.

Holland needed just 96 pitches against the Angels' overeager hitters, who drew only one walk and never reached second base while Holland outpitched Los Angeles ace John Lackey (7-5).

Lackey left in the seventh after a career-high 131 pitches, yielding eight hits and two earned runs in his first defeat since July 7.

Blue Jays 7, Orioles 3

At Toronto, Roy Halladay won his 10th straight decision over Baltimore, and Vernon Wells and Marco Scutaro hit two-run homers in a four-run third.

Halladay (12-5) allowed three runs and nine hits in eight innings, walked one and struck out four. The right-hander is 20-4 with a 2.89 ERA in 31 career games against the Orioles.

Scutaro matched a career high with four hits and Kevin Millar homered and went 3-for-3 with a walk.

Baltimore rookie Brian Matusz (1-1), making his second career start, gave up the three home runs.

Athletics 6, Royals 3

At Kansas City, Mo., Bobby Crosby homered twice and Ryan Sweeney hit a three-run shot, lifting Oakland to a win over the Royals.

Sweeney and Crosby hit consecutive homers in the second inning off Luke Hochevar (6-5) to stake Brett Anderson (8-9) to an early 4-0 lead. The Royals scored three runs in the seventh to get within one, but Kurt Suzuki hit a solo homer in the eighth and Crosby had one in the ninth to put the A's up 6-3.

Indians 8, White Sox 4

At Chicago, Jamey Carroll hit a go-ahead RBI double in the fifth inning and added a solo homer in the seventh, leading Cleveland to its third straight series win against a division rival.

The Indians have won 12 of 18.

Cleveland starter David Huff (6-6) shook off a three-run second inning to pitch into the seventh. The left-hander allowed four runs on eight hits in 6 1-3 innings.

A.J. Pierzynski and Alexei Ramirez hit solo home runs for the White Sox, who fell three games behind the Detroit Tigers in the AL Central.

Jose Contreras (4-11) allowed four runs on six hits in 4 2-3 innings.

Mariners 11, Rays 2

At Seattle, Russell Branyan broke out of a slump with his first grand slam the second longest in their five seasons in the nation's capital. They won 10 straight from June 2-12, 2005.

J.D. Martin (1-2) became the fifth Nationals pitcher to record their first win as a starter—and the second in two games. On a sultry afternoon, Martin allowed one run and five hits in five innings. He walked one and struck out one.

Marlins 12, Phillies 3

At Philadelphia, Josh Johnson pitched six impressive innings, helping the Marlins complete a three-game sweep over the Phillies.

The Marlins moved within four games of the NL East-leading Phillies with their first sweep in Philadelphia since April 2004. The Phillies fell to 3-8 season and second of the series.

Cardinals 7, Pirates 3

At Pittsburgh, Skip Schumaker's first career pinch-hit home run started a five-run eighth-inning rally for St. Louis that included Pirates pitcher Matt Capps' ejection for hitting Albert Pujols, as the Cardinals finished off a three-game sweep.

The Pirates lost a 3-2 lead in the eighth while dropping their eighth in a row, all at home. They are two losses away from their longest home losing streak since PNC Park opened in 2001, a 10-game run in 2005.

Joel Pineiro (10-9) fell behind 3-0 as Steve Pearce hit a two-run homer, but stayed in to pitch seven innings and improve to 4-0 in his last seven starts.

Reds 5, Giants 2

At San Francisco, Aaron Harang ended the worst winless stretch of his career with his first victory since late May, Brandon Phillips and Adam Rosales each homered and the Reds beat the Giants.

The Giants, who had won six straight home series, fell into a tie with Colorado for the NL wild card lead after the Rockies beat the Chicago Cubs 11-5 at Coors Field.

Rockies 11, Cubs 5

At Denver, Todd Helton had three hits to extended his hitting streak to 14 games and Dexter Fowler scored three times.

Carlos Gonzalez also had three hits for Colorado, which had 14 hits.

Milton Bradley went 4-for-5 and Koyie Hill had three hits for the Cubs, who had a season-high 17 hits despite playing most of the game without manager Lou Piniella.

Piniella was ejected after a heated argument with second base umpire Chris Guccione over his call in a disputed second-inning double-play. Piniella argued that second baseman Clint Barmes wasn't on the bag on the relay throw from third, which would have allowed Jeff Baker to score.

Mets 5, Padres 1

At San Diego, Johan Santana threw eight strong innings and tied his career high with two hits and an RBI as the New York Mets avoided a four-game sweep with a win over the Padres.

Santana (13-8) tied for the major league lead in wins as he held the Padres to one run on five hits as New York won for only the third time in 11 games.

Santana helped himself with the bat as he singled twice, drove in one run, scored a run and had one walk.

The win snapped the Mets' eight-game losing streak at Petco Park and was just their third win against San Diego in 15 games.

Braves 8, Dodgers 2

At Los Angeles, Javier Vazquez won his fifth straight decision with eight solid innings as the Braves beat the Dodgers to take three of the four games in their weekend series.

Vazquez (10-7) reached double digits in wins for the 10th consecutive season, handing the NL West-leading Dodgers their 10th loss in 15 games. The Braves have won five of their last six, and are four games over .500 (58-54) for the first time since they were 5-1 on April 12.

in six years, Ryan Rowland-Smith rebounded from a shaky beginning to pitch effectively into the seventh inning and Seattle rolled over Tampa Bay.

Franklin Gutierrez's second consecutive three-hit game included a game-turning home run in the second inning off Scott Kazmir (6-7).

Rowland-Smith (2-1) allowed two early runs but nothing else. He struck out a season-high six in 6 2-3 innings, as Seattle took two of three games from last season's AL champions to stay on the fringes of the wild-card race.

Nationals 9, Diamondbacks 2

At Washington, Elijah Dukes drove in three runs and Ryan Zimmerman had three hits as the Washington Nationals won their eighth straight game with a victory over the Arizona Diamondbacks.

The Nationals' eight-game run is

DuPuy on Ortiz: 'I accept what he says'

NEW YORK (AP)—Baseball's No. 2 official takes David Ortiz at his word that over-the-counter supplements and vitamins likely caused him to wind up on a list of alleged drug users.

"I'm not in a position to believe or disbelieve. I accept what he says," Bob DuPuy, baseball's president and chief operating officer, said Sunday.

Detroit Tigers manager Jim Leyland also backed Ortiz.

"I could care less what anybody else thinks," Leyland said. "If David Ortiz said he didn't knowingly take anything, I believe him."

Ortiz said at a news conference Saturday that he never knowingly used steroids. Two senior executives from Major League Baseball attended his news conference at Yankee Stadium, a sign of management support.

The New York Times reported last month that Ortiz and Manny Ramirez were on the federal list and said in June that Sammy Sosa was on it. In February, Sports Illustrated reported Alex Rodriguez was on the list, and Rodriguez later admitted using Primobolan from 2001-03.

Batting .171 (6 for 35) with two homers and six RBIs since the July 30 report, Ortiz was not in the starting lineup for Sunday night's series finale against the Yankees. With the crowd chanting "Steroids!" he pinch hit in the ninth inning and walked as New York won 5-2 to complete a four-game sweep.

"I think he's exhausted mentally and physically," Red Sox manager Terry Francona said before the game.

Samples and records from baseball's anonymous survey in 2003 were seized by the federal government the following year from drug-testing companies as part of the Bay Area Laboratory Co-Operative investigation into Barry Bonds and others. The list of 104 players said to have tested positive, attached to a grand jury subpoena, has been the subject of a five-year legal fight, with the union trying to force the government to return the material taken during raids.

IT&E schools PSS in opener, Docomo wins

By ROSELYN B. MONROYO

REPORTER

Defending champion IT&E taught Public School System how to win a game even with a depleted lineup: Start strong and hang in there.

IT&E, which played with only six players, built an early lead in the first quarter against a complete, but sluggish PSS crew to cruise to a 75-57 victory at the start of the 2009 IT&E Inter-Government/Business Basketball League last Friday at the Gilbert C. Ada Gymnasium.

The host, which won over Autonomous in last year's finals, held PSS to only five points in the first period to take a commanding 23-5 lead.

PSS was without a field goal in more than the first three minutes of the game, as it struggled offensively and defensively. A break-away layup from Derrick Augenbaugh finally put PSS in the scoreboard at the 6:43 mark of the first period. Bob Coldeen added a free throw a few minutes later and the third basket of the quarter came in the closing seconds of the opening period.

Edsel Mendoza started IT&E's scoring with a split free throw and went on to notch nine more points in the first period. Elmer Esdrelon added six, Joemary Tumaquip chipped in three, and Juan Manibusan canned a side jumper off an Esdrelon feed.

The five IT&E players were forced to play in no relief in the first quarter, as its sixth player, Ernie Fernandez reported to the game only midway in the second period.

Holding an 18-point lead after the first period, IT&E slowed down a bit in the second canto. However, PSS failed to capitalize on the opportunity, as it continued to struggle. PSS made only its third field goal in the game in about the seventh minute mark of the second canto and IT&E still outscored them in the entire period, 13-11.

Five straight points from Esdrelon and a fastbreak layup from Mendoza gave making contributions for IT&E in the second half, firing all his 14 points in the last 20 minutes of the game.

Mendoza led all scorers with 25 points, while Esdrelon added 21. Peter Mendiola nailed 24, while Gyles Ruloked finished with 10 for PSS.

In the second match, Docomo made a statement game, crushing Bank of Guam, 103-54.

Reinforced by UFO stalwarts Kae Bernardo and James Villacrusis, Docomo dominated Bank of Guam from start to finish.

Bernardo logged a game-high 28 points, while Villacrusis chipped in 19. Four other Docomo players finished in double figures, making the team one of the top offensive threats in the league. Kelvin Fitial drilled 15, Syl Teregeyo and Wowie Abuel had 12 apiece, and Jun Estolas contributed 11.

Twelve teams are battling for this year's title. Also on the list are Micronesian Brokers, Inc., Tinian, DCCA, CPA, ARFF, Customs, CHC, and Hyatt Regency Saipan.

In the first game of the day, Korean Juniors notched their second win in the second round after outclassing MP United, 2-1.

Two goals from Brian Ko in the second half gave Korean Juniors their fifth win in the regular season.

After a scoreless first half, Ko broke the spell with his first goal in the 57th minute. MP United then tied the game when Dae Min Jeon scored in the 69th minute. However, MP United failed to defend the streaking Ko, who canned the winning goal in the 80th minute.

Yvonne, Clayton head to World Championships

Sprinters Yvonne Bennett and Clayton Kenty are not yet done representing the CNMI in off-island tournaments, as they headed to Berlin, Germany yesterday for the 12th IAAF World Championships in Athletics.

Bennett and Kenty just completed the Oceania Regional Championships 2009/Micronesian Athletics Championships in Queensland, Australia and together with 10 other CNMI athletes helped the Commonwealth dethrone three-time overall champion Guam. Kenty and Bennett's teammates returned to Saipan early yesterday morning, while the two World Championships bets stayed in Guam for several hours to wait for their connecting flight to Japan. From Japan, they will board another connecting flight to Berlin.

The 19-year-old Bennett warmed up for the World Championships by winning three gold medals (400m run, 4x100m relay, and 4x400m relay), one silver (100m run), and one bronze (200m run) in the Land Down Under. Kenty also took a couple of medals, claiming one silver (men's 400m hurdles) and two bronze (men's 100m hurdles and 4x400m relay).

In the World Championships, Bennett is entered in the 100m race and since getting a medal will be a long shot against the world's best sprinters, she instead is aiming to break the CNMI record she holds.

The CNMI mark in the women's 100m stands at 13.16 seconds, which Bennett posted during the 2007 World Championships in Osaka, Japan.

Making it to the World Championships for the second straight time is a sort of record for Bennett, as she had this achievement after being involved with athletics for only about four years.

"World Championships appearances in four years is really quite a feat and I am thankful to my coaches, teammates, and family for being supportive and helping me earn the honor to represent the CNMI in the World Championships. Every time I go out there and race, it gives me great pride that I am racing not for myself, but for the CNMI," Micronesia's fastest woman said.

While Bennett is expected to be used to the jitters of the high-level of competition in Berlin in her return trip to the World Championships, first-timer Kenty knows there maybe butterflies in his stomach once he races against the best of the world.

"I may get nervous at the starting line, but once I begin running, I will be focus on getting to the finish line and racing against myself," Kenty said.
